

Intimate Partner Violence vs. Domestic Violence

Intimate Partner Violence

Intimate Partner Violence includes any behaviors that one intimate partner (current or former) uses over another to establish power and control. These can include physical or sexual violence, but they do not always; they can be financial, emotional/psychological, cultural, spiritual, reproductive, or other controlling behaviors.

Child Survivors of Intimate Partner DV

Children are often accidentally or incidentally impacted by a parent experiencing Intimate Partner Domestic Violence. Our child advocate and therapist work with children whose primary issues/concerns stem from witnessing their parent go through Intimate Partner Domestic Violence.

Domestic Violence

- 1) For YWCA Spokane, we utilize the term domestic violence to refer to any situation where one partner in an intimate relationship tries to maintain power and control over the other person.
- 2) Legally, Domestic Violence applies to any two parties in the same household who commit crimes of physical harm, bodily injury, or assault; creating a fear that physical harm, bodily injury, pushing, shoving, slapping, punching, kicking, or assault will happen soon; sexual assault; or stalking.

Child Survivors of Domestic Violence

If the prominent concern is sexual assault and/or child maltreatment (particularly physical abuse), YWCA Spokane will refer these cases to Lutheran Community Services or Partners with Families and Children for support services. Depending on the nature and severity of the abuse, may also be a mandated report to Child Protective Services.

Victims of Violence: Mathias L. Knudsen, 2020 Victims of Violence Support Challenges and Outcomes critically exposes some of the factors used in the risk determination of intimate partner violence alongside an analysis on the definition and management of the risk of recidivism Traditional beliefs and gender stereotypes underlying police attitudes associated with domestic violence are explored The authors provide considerations for domestic violence prevention and intervention programs highlighting the importance of adopting proactive and supportive attitudes in response to victims Researchers have measured intimate partner violence and survivors help seeking through a variety of different instruments making it difficult to paint a consistent picture of intimate partner violence. As such, this collection includes the results of a study comparing three measures so as to examine whether a certain measure produces a discernible pattern of results. A subsequent study analyzes the relationship between psychopathological symptomatology and intimate partner violence in a sample of 122 Portuguese women participants: 61 with a judiciary victim status and 61 without this status. To avoid discrepancies between medical reporting and the reconstruction of sex crimes, it is crucial to use strategies which focus not only on technical aspects of evidence collection but also on the way the victim's story will be recorded. Women most commonly experience violence victimisation by someone close to them. Therapeutic work with victims/survivors of intimate partner violence may range from immediate crisis intervention to long-term support. The award-winning PAWS FOR EMPOWERMENT program in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is discussed as well as the successes and challenges the program has faced in rescuing and training shelter dogs to serve as canine advocates. A qualitative study is presented which aims to further our understanding of how domestic violence between intimate partners can affect maternal parenting. The sample used comprised 15 mothers and victims of domestic violence, focusing on understanding how they conceive of their role as a parent. The authors go on to explore the extent to which domestic violence is regulated in Indonesia and the extent to which such regulation is implemented. This compilation also examines how the practice of forced marriage arrangements creates vulnerabilities for girls and young women. Accordingly, a discussion is provided concerning differences and similarities between the concepts of arranged and forced marriage and its relationship to sexual trafficking. The authors summarize findings on the association between cyber dating abuse and offline dating violence in a sample of 145 Portuguese adolescents and young adults. Additionally, a review of the literature on the phenomenon of multiple child and youth victimization is carried out, addressing the main risk factors, the implications for the development of children and young people, and guidelines for intervention. The impact that community violence exposure has on youth is assessed, accompanied with practical proposals for prevention. The concept of community violence and the different types of violence and crimes that could be involved are examined, mapping the prevalence of youth affected by this type of violence. Accordingly, to develop appropriate helpful responses to victims of violence and crime, it is particularly relevant to assess people's perceptions, to be aware of their victimization experiences, and to identify their needs. In closing, using Saint Lucia as an example, some of the challenges of supporting victims of intimate violence on an island are illustrated, discussing innovative policies and practices to best support victims in this context.

Men's Experiences of Violence in Intimate Relationships Marianne Inéz Lien, Jørgen Lorentzen, 2019-01-04. This open access book draws on a broad study on violence against men from both male and female partners in Norway to contribute to the research on intimate partner violence. It identifies similarities in men's experiences and backgrounds, including in their perceptions of their own victimisation. Marianne Inez Lien and Jørgen Lorentzen argue that the traditional gender power model should be modified and supplemented, and propose that we consider violence in terms of psychological
