

Understanding Heart Disease

Blood supply and the heart

The heart is a muscle that also depends on a continuous flow of oxygen and nutrients. The blood supply to the heart muscle is provided by the coronary arteries. The coronary arteries branch off from the aorta just below the heart's base.

How heart disease develops

Over time, the walls of the coronary arteries can become thickened with a deposit called plaque. The plaque, which contains cholesterol, causes the arteries to narrow and restrict blood flow to the heart muscle, leading to a heart attack and sometimes the underlying condition coronary artery disease. If left untreated, coronary artery disease can progress from stable, asymptomatic heart failure.

What is angina?

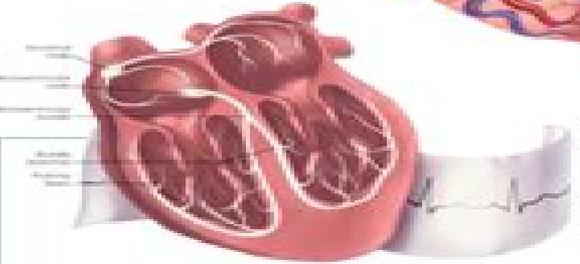

When the coronary artery is angina, a painful chest discomfort, reduced oxygen flow to the heart muscle is the result. This is caused by plaque build-up in the coronary arteries, which narrows the arteries and restricts blood flow to the heart muscle. The chest pain is usually described as a squeezing or heavy pressure on the chest. It is usually triggered by physical activity or stress. It usually goes away when the person rests or takes nitroglycerin. It is usually a warning sign of a heart attack.

What is a heart attack?

A heart attack, or myocardial infarction, occurs when blood supply to the heart muscle is suddenly blocked or reduced. This is caused by plaque build-up in the coronary arteries, which narrows the arteries and restricts blood flow to the heart muscle. The chest pain is usually described as a squeezing or heavy pressure on the chest. It is usually triggered by physical activity or stress. It usually goes away when the person rests or takes nitroglycerin. It is usually a warning sign of a heart attack.

- Angina warning symptoms
- Chest pain or pressure that is not easily tolerated and commonly follows physical activity or stress
 - Increasing tightness, burning or aching sensation
 - Often relieved under or to the left of the sternum
 - Similar sensation to indigestion or gas
 - Typically lasts no longer than 15 minutes
 - Radiating to shoulder, arm, jaw, neck or other areas

- Heart attack warning symptoms
- Pain, tightness, or sensation of fullness or pressure in the chest that is not brought on by physical activity or stress
 - Chest pain radiating to the jaw, shoulder or arm
 - Shortness of breath
 - Nausea and vomiting
 - Pale, clammy skin
 - Weakness and light-headedness

Rhythmic disturbances

Rhythmic disturbances, or arrhythmias, are irregular heartbeats. They can be caused by a variety of factors, including changes in the heart's electrical system, changes in the heart's structure, or changes in the heart's function. They can be life-threatening if not treated. They can be caused by a variety of factors, including changes in the heart's electrical system, changes in the heart's structure, or changes in the heart's function. They can be life-threatening if not treated.

- Arrhythmic warning symptoms
- Signs of a rhythmic disturbance may include palpitations, often described as fluttering or a fast, irregular heart rate without other warning signs or as a rapid or irregular heart rate without other warning signs
 - Other signs include pounding or racing heartbeats not related to exercise, repeated episodes of light-headedness or dizziness, sudden fainting spells, and sudden collapse, or life-threatening conditions

Causes of coronary artery disease

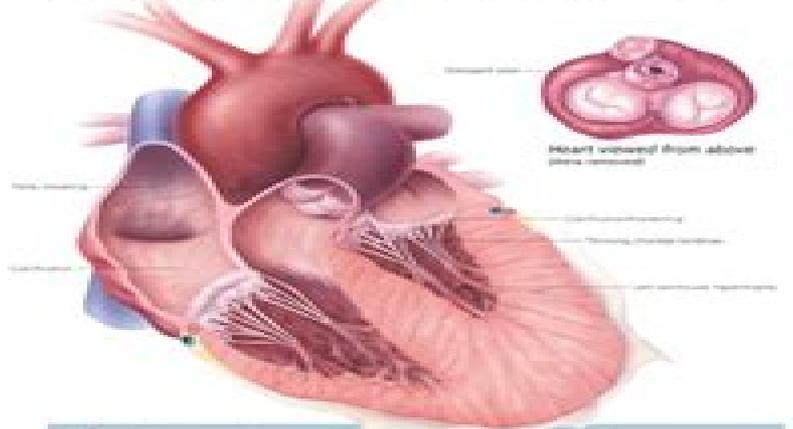

The most common cause of coronary artery disease is atherosclerosis. This is a condition in which the arteries become narrowed and hardened by a buildup of plaque in the inner walls of the arteries. The plaque is made up of cholesterol, fat, and other substances. It can be caused by a variety of factors, including changes in the heart's electrical system, changes in the heart's structure, or changes in the heart's function. They can be life-threatening if not treated.

Healthy lifestyle changes

To help prevent coronary artery disease, you can make changes to your lifestyle. These changes can help reduce your risk of developing coronary artery disease. They can be caused by a variety of factors, including changes in the heart's electrical system, changes in the heart's structure, or changes in the heart's function. They can be life-threatening if not treated.

What is congestive heart failure?

Congestive heart failure, or CHF, is a condition in which the heart is unable to pump enough blood to meet the body's needs. It is caused by a variety of factors, including changes in the heart's electrical system, changes in the heart's structure, or changes in the heart's function. They can be life-threatening if not treated.

- CHF warning symptoms
- The most common signs of congestive heart failure include:
 - Shortness of breath during regular activity (especially at night)
 - Difficulty breathing while resting or sleeping
 - Swollen ankles, feet, or legs (edema)
 - Fluid buildup in the lungs, which can lead to coughing
