The Decline of Fertility in Germany, 1871-1939 Arthur J. Knodel, 2015-03-08 This is the second in a series of monographs on the historic decline of European fertility to be issued by the Office of Population Research at Princeton University It is a detailed statistical description and analysis of the transition from high to low birth rates which took place in Germany between Unification and the beginning of World War II It assembles an exceptionally comprehensive amount of evidence that will be of great importance to social historians as well as sociologists and demographers John E Knodel relies on modern yet simple methods of measuring the main demographic trends in Germany and uses straightforward methods to test the plausibility of the many hypotheses that have been advanced to explain the great falls in fertility that occurred throughout the western world in the late nineteenth century Originally published in 1974 The Princeton Legacy Library uses the latest print on demand technology to again make available previously out of print books from the distinguished backlist of Princeton University Press These editions preserve the original texts of these important books while presenting them in durable paperback and hardcover editions The goal of the Princeton Legacy Library is to vastly increase access to the rich scholarly heritage found in the thousands of books published by Princeton University Press since its founding in 1905

The Coworking (R)evolution Diane-Gabrielle Tremblay, Gerhard Krauss, 2024-02-12 The digitalization of work processes and the generalization of IT are creating unprecedented opportunities An increasing part of the workforce is experimenting with new forms of work as freelancers self employed or highly skilled employees with greater autonomy International in scope this book comprehensively explores these new models of work mobility and life trajectories and the increasing role of non metropolitan coworking spaces Asian Population Studies Series, 1992 Population Headliners, 1992 Ethiopia's agrifood system: Past trends, present challenges, and future scenarios Dorosh, Paul A., ed., Minton, Bart, ed., 2020-09-14 Ethiopia has experienced impressive agricultural growth and poverty reduction stemming in part from substantial public investments in agriculture Yet the agriculture sector now faces increasing land and water constraints along with other challenges to growth Ethiopia's Agrifood System Past Trends Present Challenges and Future Scenarios presents a forward looking analysis of Ethiopia's agrifood system in the context of a rapidly changing economy Growth in the agriculture sector remains essential to continued poverty reduction in Ethiopia and will depend on sustained investment in the agrifood system especially private sector investment Many of the policies for a successful agricultural and rural development strategy for Ethiopia are relevant for other African countries as well Ethiopia's Agrifood System should be a valuable resource for policymakers development specialists and others concerned with economic development in Africa south of the Sahara Vacant Land Luca Salvati, Ioannis Konaxis, 2026-01-01 This book sheds light on the mechanisms at the base of formation and consolidation of vacant land in metropolitan regions an under debated issue of urban growth regional science and architecture The book adopts a kaleidoscope of different academic and practical approaches mixing multiple perspectives that combine architectural and urban planning disciplines with more specifically economic social and environmental aspects of the urban landscape The book adopts a multi disciplinary frame with the aim at reading the complexity of mechanisms and processes underlying urban growth and the formation of vacant land Vacant land was investigated from three perspectives architectural design economic social and planning environmental The multiple reading frames in the book highlights further academic debate on a particularly intriguing while less investigated topic Nagarlok,1998 Population Monograph of Nepal,2003 People in motion, forests in transition: Trends in migration, urbanization, and remittances and their effects on tropical forests Susanna Hecht,Anastasia Lucy Yang,Bimbika Sijapati Basnett,Christine Padoch,Nancy L Peluso,2015-11-08 Migration is not new In recent decades however human mobility has increased in numbers and scope and has helped fuel a global shift in the human population from predominantly rural to urban Migration overall is a livelihood investment and resilience strategy It is affected by changes across multiple sectors and at varying scales and is affected by macro policies transnational networks regional conditions local demands political and social relations household options and individual desires Such enhanced mobility changes in populations and communities in both sending and receiving areas and the remittances that mobility generates are key elements of current transitions that have both direct and indirect consequences for forests Because migration processes engage with rural populations and spaces in the tropics they inevitably affect forest resources through changes in use and management Yet links between forests and migration have been overlooked too often in the literature on migration as well as in discussions about forest based livelihoods With a focus on landscapes that include tropical forests this paper explores trends and diversities in the ways in which migration urbanization and personal remittances affect rural livelihoods and forests

1961-1971 This improvement may be attributed to the various health programs undertaken by the government such as eradication programs for malaria, smallpox, tuberculosis, typhoid, and cholera. About 50% of the decline resulted from the control of communicable diseases. Malaria and tuberculosis were among the important causes, and dysentery, diarrhea, and gastroenteric diseases including cholera and typhoid accounted for about 2 to 3 million deaths per year in the country in the 1950s. In 1962, the government introduced the malaria eradication program, and full control of malaria was achieved by 1977, except for the northern and southern parts of the country. After the decade of 1960-1970, mortality rates were very stable at 12.17/1000. Infant mortality rates from 1911-1983 indicate an overall improvement from 205/1000 in 1911 to 113/1000 in 1983. The rates in recent years appear to vary from 115 to 125, but show some increase for 1981 and 1982. Mortality differentials due to sex of children are very high. Female children of ages older than 1 have a higher risk of mortality than their male counterparts, but for neonatal deaths, the situation is reversed. Objectives in the 2nd 5-year plan (1980-1985) include: 1. bridging the rural-urban gap; 2. controlling major communicable diseases; 3. providing health and family planning services in a package; 4. improving the quality and availability of drugs and medicine; and 5. developing and integrating indigenous and homeopathic systems of medicines with the overall health care systems.

Agricultural Development and Land Rights in Ethiopia. Challenges and Government Initiatives Simon Asegid, 2024-07-29 Seminar paper from the year 2024 in the subject Politics Region Africa Addis Ababa University Department of Public Administration and Development Management course Public Policy Concepts and Principles language English abstract Ethiopia's economy is heavily reliant on agriculture with approximately 85% of the total employment located in the agricultural sector. Rural land is a crucial source of income and plays a significant role in providing food for the population. However, Ethiopia has faced persistent food insecurity, especially in rural areas, due to factors such as small landholdings, land degradation, and the impact of climate change and drought. This paper examines the significance of rural land use in Ethiopia, the importance of understanding land use patterns and trends, and the key drivers of rural land use changes. It provides a background on Ethiopia's rural landscape, the historical context of land tenure and management systems, and the patterns and trends in rural land use. The paper highlights the key drivers of rural land use changes, including population growth and urbanization, agricultural modernization and commercialization, infrastructure development, environmental factors, and government policies and programs. It also discusses the impacts of these land use changes, such as effects on food security and rural livelihoods, implications for natural resource management and biodiversity, and social and economic disparities between different rural communities. The paper concludes by discussing policy responses and interventions, including land tenure reforms, agricultural development strategies, and environmental protection and natural resource management initiatives. It also identifies challenges and limitations of current policy approaches and provides recommendations for addressing the complex landscape of rural land use in Ethiopia.
