World Population and Development Philip M. Hauser, 1979 Commemorating the first decade of operation of the UNFPA this collection of 17 essays explores interrelationships between various aspects of population and socioeconomic factors including population redistribution population quality fertility regulation and food production and security

Population and Development in the Third World Allan M. Findlay, A. M. Findlay, 1987 Looks at how and why populations change not only in level but also in composition Economic and cultural factors are discussed and questions such as how populations respond to geographical imbalances in natural resources are raised

Population, Development, and the Environment Helen James, 2019-02-15 This book takes the reader into some of the most intransigent social economic and political issues that impact achieving sustainable development in Asia and the Pacific Through meticulous analysis of the integrated relationships between population development and the environment the chapters in this volume investigate the impacts of hydropower development on fragile ecosystems mining landslides and environmental degradation deforestation water and food security rural urban migration poverty alleviation civil society and community empowerment and how disaster recovery requires multi scalar and multi disciplinary approaches that take into account governance culture and leadership Legal frameworks may be legislated but are often rarely implemented The book will be valuable to students of sustainability population and development and governmental policy advising sectors as well as the NGO and humanitarian sectors The distinctive characteristic of this book is that it encapsulates an integrated multi disciplinary focus which brings to the discussion both robust empirical research and challenging policy applications in the investigation of how the sustainable development goals may be achieved in Asia and the Pacific

Population and Development Robert L. Cliquet, Kristiaan Thienpont, 2013-04-09 Since the onset of modernisation the world population has doubled several times and will soon reach 6 billion of people The annual rate of increase in the world population is approximately 90 million people This is the largest absolute level of population growth ever recorded According to the most recent population projections of the United Nations the world population will probably double again before stabilising at a stationary level Ninety percent of the present and future population growth is accounted for by developing countries The fast increase in the size of the population in many developing countries is a serious obstacle to their attempts to overcome their backwardness make a substantial improvement to their quality of life and achieve a sustainable way of exploiting their renewable and non renewable resources At the same time non sustainable consumption and production patterns in the industrial countries and among wealthy citizens in developing countries place additional burdens on the planet s natural resources and ecosystems With a view of considering these problems and elaborating policy guidelines the United Nations staged its International Conference on Population and Development ICPD in Cairo Egypt September 5 13 1994 This monograph deals with the background to the ICPD its preparation proceedings and contents It also evaluates its results and recommendations by comparing the ICPD Action Programme with the current scientific literature The ICPD dealt with the key issues concerning the interrelations between population development and environment and their causes and was not limited to marginal issues such as abortion promiscuity and homosexuality as was the impression given in the media as a result of the way these questions were distorted by the action of religious fundamentalists The ICPD Action Programme forms an impressive charter with a broad range of relevant policy recommendations Nevertheless compared to most of the current scientific literature the ICPD seems to underestimate the seriousness and urgency of the issues at stake

Population Development Challenges in China Pengkun Wu,2020-09-12 This book explores the population development challenges in China It started by analyzing two of the major challenges designing a suitable family planning policy and dealing with the serious provincial population difference It then proposes effective measures to address these challenges by adopting various quantitative methods such as system dynamics nonlinear programming and spatial econometrics in evaluating the effects of different policy scenarios which made the results more scientific and reliable thus the final policy suggestions effective and evidence based The book includes a number of mathematical models and is suitable for graduate students and researchers in population modeling and relevant research areas
