Ministry and Language: Women in Language

Edited by
Margaret MacLure

Feminist scholars have long argued that the "male" and "female" ways of thinking are not just different but also hierarchical, with the male way being superior. This volume of essays explores the ways in which language and thought are intertwined in the construction of gender.

The essays in this volume are organized into three sections: Language and Gender, Gender and Language, and Language and Power. Each section contains several essays that explore different aspects of the relationship between language and gender.

The first section, Language and Gender, contains essays by Susan Wray, Deborah Cameron, and others. These essays explore the ways in which language is used to construct gender and how gender influences language use. The second section, Gender and Language, contains essays by Margaret MacLure, Judith Butler, and others. These essays explore the ways in which gender influences the way we think and speak. The third section, Language and Power, contains essays by Nancy Lurie, Judith Butler, and others. These essays explore the ways in which language is used to exercise power and how power influences language use.

The volume is a valuable contribution to the study of language and gender. It provides a comprehensive overview of the current research in this area and offers new insights into the relationship between language and gender. The essays are written in a clear and accessible style, making them suitable for both scholars and students. The volume is a must-read for anyone interested in the study of language and gender.
