International Graduate School of Business,2005 While Business to Consumer B2C e commerce has increased sales opportunities for the seller it has also created new threats for potential customers one of which is their privacy invasion Personal information privacy is becoming a matter of increasing concern over the Internet In this review a description of privacy concerns is attempted and empirical studies in this area are reviewed The descriptive review includes the antecedents of privacy and security concerns and privacy assurances A description of privacy and security concern perspectives and dimensions is also reported in the area of current e commerce development and policies in Malaysia The conclusion for the study suggests that privacy assurances such as Web privacy policy legislation and Internet seal of approval will contribute to reduce these perceived threats It also appears that online privacy concerns are still not solved if personal information is not secured when the above policies and regulations cannot enforce the principles of data privacy This implies that online security is an important feature to protect and secure personal information Thus privacy and security concerns can be a major critical risk factor for the success of B2C e commerce No prior studies have yet addressed the issue of privacy concerns in Malaysia This may therefore need further research to understand the current practices here
