

Handwriting analysis (graphology) has been mentioned in several sources as a technique for screening applicants in the context of personnel selection. Levy (1979) reported that in Europe, where it was developed, graphology is routinely used as a hiring tool by an estimated 85% of all companies. American companies have been slower in accepting and developing graphology. Nonetheless sources estimate that some 3,000 American firms currently retain handwriting analysts as personnel consultants. Most sources promoting the technique stress that it is a quick, technically simple, and relatively inexpensive assessment procedure. Furthermore, it is one in which an applicant's active cooperation is not required, thus eliminating the danger of faking. However, most of the published work appears in sources not widely circulated and a systematic review of this literature reflects only limited research on this technique. The current study attempts to change this writing has been established in a number of studies (e.g., Fluckinger, Tripp, & Weinberg, 1961, Lockowandt, 1976, Squire, 1967). However, the evidence is less definitive on the reliability of graphologists in their assessments of handwriting samples. Whereas Galbraith and Wilson (1964), Prystav (1971), and Hofsommer (1965) found median interjudge reliabilities for assessments around .75, the nature and quality of script samples used in these studies varied considerably. Because the field of graphology emphasizes the need for a standardized approach to obtaining scripts (Roman, 1952), this diversity is troublesome. Variation in the length of the sample (one line to a page), in the writing tool used (pen, pencil, felt pen), and in the content of the script may all affect the reliabilities obtained.

Two studies have examined the potential validity of handwriting analysis in the personnel area. In the Zden and Weaver (1967)
