

An aerial photograph of a wide, braided river system. The river is composed of multiple channels separated by small islands of dense green forest. The surrounding landscape is a valley with steep, forested hillsides. In the background, there are large, rugged mountains under a clear blue sky. The word "Wild" is overlaid in white text in the upper right quadrant of the image.

Wild Rivers:

Unstable Relations Eve Vincent, Timothy Neale, 2016 Unstable Relations examines the past and emerging political tensions that mark green black encounters providing fine grained ethnographic case studies of the relationship between environmentalism and Indigenous people The 1970s witnessed the emergence of a global environmental movement in response to rampant resource extraction This moment gave rise to a celebrated green black alliance between environmentalists and Indigenous groups in Australia In recent years this relationship has come under increased critical scrutiny in Australia and elsewhere spurred in part by the global mining boom and continuing concerns about the effects of climate change As the relationship between environmentalists and Indigenous peoples is subjected to renewed public inquiry this book undertakes the vital task of submitting Indigenous environmentalist relations to detailed analysis This book brings together leading social scientists writers and activists to subject both conservationists assumptions and practices and the Indigenous environmentalist relation to rigorous empirical inquiry Covering noted controversies and campaigns such as the Wild Rivers Act and Walmadany James Price Point and key issues such as mining native title rights feral species forestry national parks and payment for environmental services the authors explore contemporary entanglements Unstable Relations explores possibilities for alliances and interrelations while also probing disagreements and dissonances Wild Rivers, 1979
