States of America

Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen united States of America

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth a separate and equal station, it is their right, it is their duty, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Liberty. But whenever any Form of Government is found to be destructive of these ends, the People have the Right to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Liberty. Prudence, in such a case, may dictate to a People some temporary Tolerances, and a gradual Reformation, and a long Sufferance may be necessary to entitle them to a full and complete Separation. But when a long Train of Abuses and Misuses has taken place, and when it has become necessary to alter the former System of Government, the People are obliged to alter or abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Liberty. We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Liberty. But whenever any Form of Government is found to be destructive of these ends, the People have the Right to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Liberty. Prudence, in such a case, may dictate to a People some temporary Tolerances, and a gradual Reformation, and a long Sufferance may be necessary to entitle them to a full and complete Separation. But when a long Train of Abuses and Misuses has taken place, and when it has become necessary to alter the former System of Government, the People are obliged to alter or abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such Principles and organizing its Powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Liberty.
