The midday sun had warmed New York City when Rose Lee O Connell set her heavy suitcase down on a curb at an intersection three blocks from the bus depot while waiting for a traffic light change. The soft breezes teased her honey blond hair. Her leggy slim figure was dressed in white pants and low heeled blue walking shoes. The oval neck of her short sleeved navy blue sweater with a band of white stars knitted in across the top was highlighted by an expensive broach attached to a thin gold cabled chain which hung from around her slender neck. Rose Lee was an attractive woman and young in her early twenties. When she was fourteen her father enrolled her in a renown girls finishing school. Later setting aside a dream of becoming a model and to abide by her father's wishes she attended a Texas university and graduated with a masters degree in psychology. But now she was going to do it her way for once in her life. After her reign as beauty queen in her senior year in college she received several offers from well known modeling studios offering her interviews. She chose Ms Stineburger's Modeling Studio in New York City over the ones in Hollywood California. It was hard for her to believe she was now in New York City standing on a curb waiting for the long traffic light to change with only an hour to spare before her special modeling interview was to take place. While waiting for the traffic light to change so she could step down into the intersection and cross the street she became uneasy by the hustle and bustle of the busy city. Rose Lee began to realize that New York was a long way from Texas and the spacious southern mansion she shared with her oil rich father whom she adored. He had even offered to purchase an airline ticket for her and she had wished after several hours into the bus ride that she had taken up his kind offer. She was now beginning to wonder if her father hadn't been right after all about her being so tenacious about pursuing a modeling career. Keeping up with the other pedestrians going in her direction was no easy task while carrying the heavy suitcase. She finally stopped in the entryway of a large department store to check the business card in her purse for the studio's address. A polite gentleman in the bus depot had told her it was just up the street. She frowned knowing she had been misled. Her father bless him had warned her about this and other savory things that could befall young ladies if they didn't use their heads. Suddenly she stepped back into the doorway's shadow as she saw that same polite gentleman drive slowly by in a new Cadillac convertible looking as though he was searching for someone. She trembled thinking it was perhaps her and felt safe as he drove out of sight. Rose Lee missed her father now more than ever. He had raised her from the time she was a small baby after her mother who he still loved had run off with another Duke was her father's nickname his given name was Hugh Lee O Connell He was a rough bull of a man His pleasant face was sun browned and weathered The color of his hair was steel gray He was muscular built and stood just under six feet in height In his later years he dressed the part of the multi millionaire which he was He was somewhat like a junkyard dog always accepting things as they were but keeping a watchful eye on everything around him Though all work and no play had made him rich it had cost him the woman he loved He worshipped Rose Lee who was his only daughter and was disappointed when she told him she wanted to be a model instead of a psychologist even though she had spent the last four years in college and had received a masters degree in psychology But after he saw she was determined to be a model he had given in and s
