The Natural City Stephen B. Scharper, Ingrid Leman-Stefanovic, 2012-01-01 Urban and natural environments are often viewed as entirely separate entities human settlements as the domain of architects and planners and natural areas as untouched wilderness This dichotomy continues to drive decision making in subtle ways but with the mounting pressures of global climate change and declining biodiversity it is no longer viable New technologies are promising to provide renewable energy sources and greener designs but real change will require a deeper shift in values attitudes and perceptions A timely and important collection The Natural City explores how to integrate the natural environment into healthy urban centres from philosophical religious socio political and planning perspectives Recognizing the need to better link the humanities with public policy The Natural City offers unique insights for the development of an alternative vision of urban life

Housing, the Environment, and Our Changing Climate Christoph Sinn, John Perry, 2008 The climate is changing and this book aims to capture both ways in which this is true First the global warming which is taking place as our atmosphere is forced to absorb ever more man made carbon dioxide is now an indisputable reality It is not too late to prevent the worst effects of such climate change but in any event it will have a profound impact on the way we live and the kinds of houses we need Second the climate is changing albeit slowly in terms of the response by the housing world to the challenge of global warming Government has instigated a radical approach to environmental standards for new housing but has arguably been slower to realise the urgency of action to tackle poor environmental standards in the existing housing stock This completely new version of the earlier book Housing and the Environment A new agenda concentrates on the linked issues of climate change fuel shortages and fuel poverty
