

Year 5 Comprehension 14: The Talking Water Bottle

Every year, around the world, there are a billion water bottles that don't get recycled. They end up in landfills or water bodies. It's bad for the environment. So, some scientists are working on a way to make water bottles that can talk to you. They're called talking water bottles. They're made of a special material that can change its shape. And when you drink from them, they can tell you how much water you've drunk. And they can even tell you when you need to drink more water.

Emily's eyes widened with interest as she read about the new talking water bottles. She asked, "Can you just talk to me, please?"

The talking water bottle said, "Yes, Emily. I can talk, and I'll even tell you when you need to drink more water. So, how do you like that?"

Emily's eyes widened with interest as she read about the new talking water bottles. She asked, "How can I talk back to you if you're wrong, please?"

The talking water bottle said, "Yes, Emily. You can talk back to me. And I'll even tell you when you need to drink more water. So, how do you like that?"
