

Life in the city

Starting on the 10th and 11th centuries, the cities started to grow in all Europe stimulated by commerce. Peasants arrived to it to sell their crops and artisans proliferated. All this movement led to a concentration of wealth and power in the urban centers, where a new social class started to appear, the bourgeoisie. In the beginning, cities grew under the protection of the feudal lord, but in time, they had their own government.

THE CATHEDRAL
It's construction was paid with the richness of the city.

THE SQUARES

THE BOURGEOISIE

MARKETS AND FAIRS

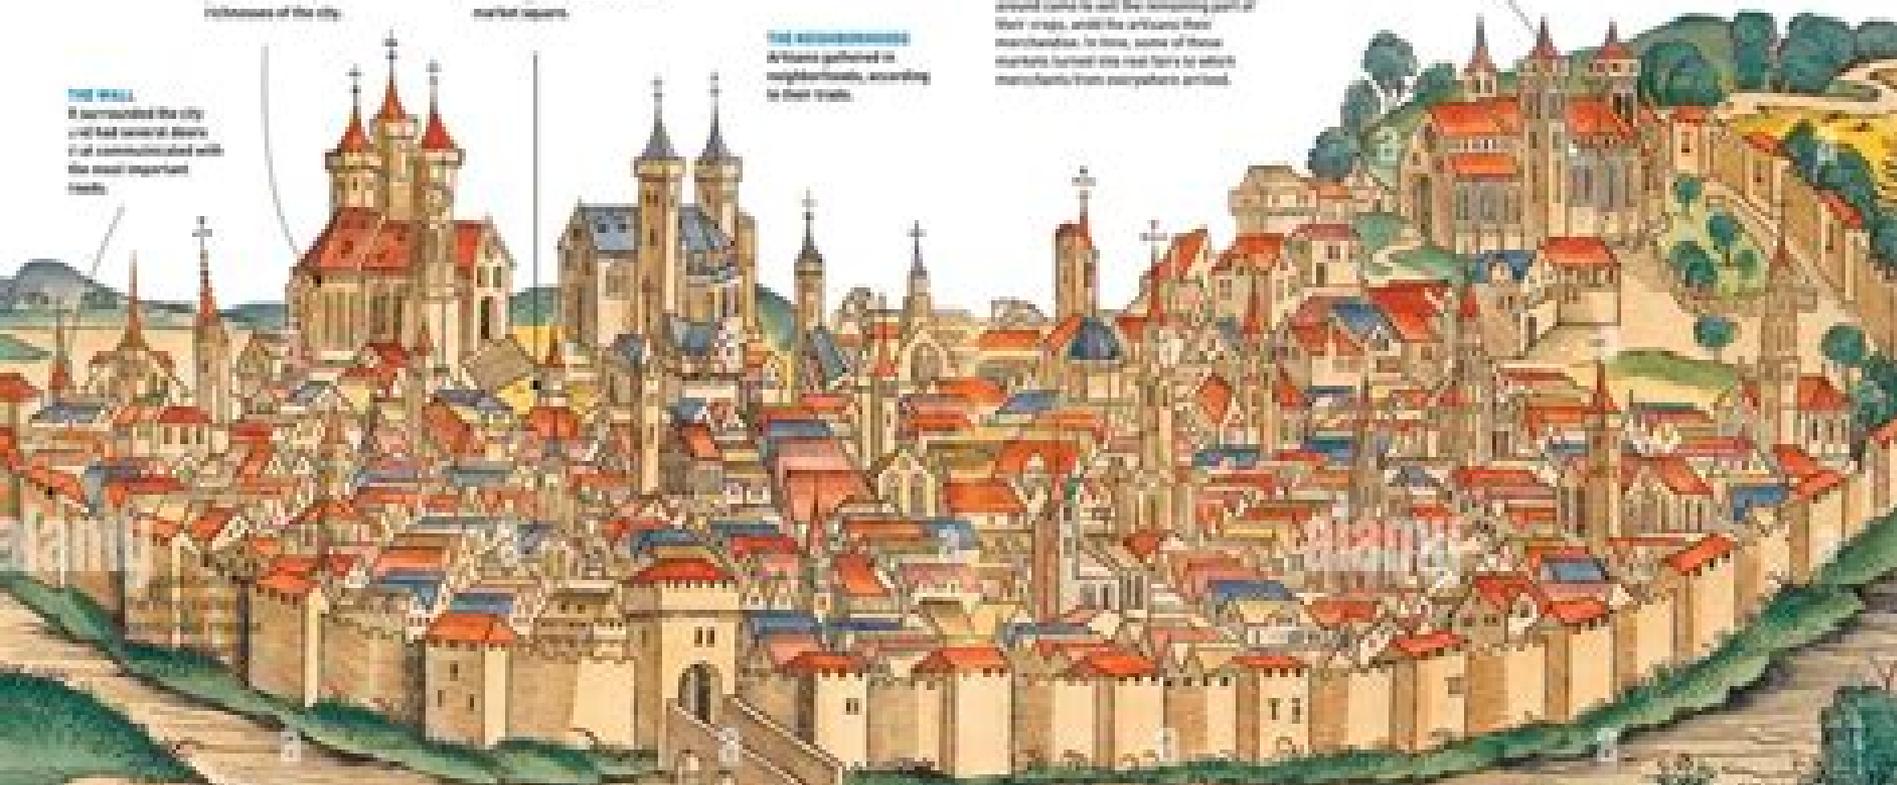

The market was the social and economic center of the city. In it, peasants from all around came to sell the remaining part of their crops, and the artisans their merchandise. In time, some of these markets turned into fairs to which manufacturers from everywhere arrived.

FAIRYTES

ARTISANS

Artisans gathered in guilds according to their trade, corporations that regulated their activity. In the guilds they organized in three levels, at the top was the master, who instructed the officials and the apprentices.

Christopher Brooke

The Structure Of Medieval:

The Structure of Medieval Society Christopher Brooke, 1971 Many aspects of medieval society are alien to the twentieth century observer such as the hierarchy of ranks and the division of authority into the secular and the religious Yet medieval history is full of personalities who attract and interest us and Christopher Brooke portrays them in the context of their society Keeping generalization to a minimum the author concentrates on particular topics the court the papacy the law the town and the countryside and explains how they functioned and some of the paradoxes implicit in them He also focuses on outstanding men of disparate background and philosophy who had a place within the complex and rigid structure of medieval society St Francis Pope Innocent III Louis VI of France Henry I of England Henry Blois the prince bishop of Winchester and Suger Abbot of St Denis Professor Brooke introduces the reader to the society of an age that achieved an extraordinarily coherent and integrated civilization one that formed an essential if often unsuspected part of our own civilization From publisher s description
