ARTICLE INFO

ABSTRACT

The National Education Policy (NEP) 2020 lays out a strategy for the future of education in India which calls for a change. The policy talks about several aspect of holistic education for children but lays emphasis on early years bringing the foundational year of young children lives to the fore front. In this paper authors have attempted to underline the multilateral learning along with highlighting the importance of promoting emotional skills with a focus on Early Childhood Education (ECE) and early years. In resonance with the NEP 2020, this paper points out that it is important to change ECCE for the holistic development of young children by optimizing abilities like creativity, analytical thinking and a whole-person approach. NEP addresses the crucial aspect of inclusive education, emphasizing diverse learning needs and socio-economic backgrounds. Importantly, regardless of where one lives or one's socioeconomic status, this policy stresses making accessible quality ECCE to every child. This article looks into innovative changes required to align present ECE classroom practices with these policy goals; as well as foregrounding key tenets for effecting them. It will also highlight the four main principles that support this transformation. This piece examines pedagogical approaches necessary to shift from rote memorization towards experiential and play-based methodologies encouraging exploration and curiosity-based learning processes. It will also look at how childhood teachers should be equipped more professionally through their continual professional development ensuring that they are always creating inclusive learning environments. Finally, the paper identifies potential challenges faced when implementing this momentous revolution which ranges from infrastructure to mindset shifts and proposes strategies to tackle these challenges head-on.

Introduction

The landscape of Early Childhood Education (ECE) is undergoing an intense transformation world-wide, driven by evolving societal values, advancements in educational research, and policy reforms. At the heart of this transformation lies a fundamental re-envisioning of the child – not merely as a passive recipient of knowledge but as an active, curious, and capable learner deserving of holistic development.

This paper delves into the intricacies of this paradigm shift, focusing specifically on the implications for early childhood education within the framework of NEP 2020 in India. By critically examining the policy's objectives, strategies, and envisioned outcomes, we aim to unravel the potential opportunities and challenges it presents for stakeholders involved in ECE, including educators, policymakers, parents, and most importantly, the children themselves.

In the pages that follow, we navigate through the theoretical underpinnings of early childhood education, contextualizing them within the socio-cultural fabric of India. Drawing upon interdisciplinary perspectives from psychology, sociology, and education studies, this paper examines interlinkages between NEP 2020 and seeks to align ECE practices with contemporary theoretical understandings of child development. Furthermore, we analyze the policy's provisions for infrastructure, curriculum, teacher training, and parental involvement, assessing their adequacy in nurturing the diverse needs and potentials of young learners.
