Description of this book: When satellite tracking stations around the world begin receiving radio signals from deep space, Joe Burke, owner of a small engineering company, is about to propose marriage to Sandy Lund, a woman he has known since high school. The signals consist of a repeated series of flute-like notes which Joe recognizes. Joe plays for Sandy a tape recording he made a year earlier, and it sounds just like the signal from space. Joe explains that he got the notes from a lucid dream that has come to him off and on since he was eleven. In the dream, he is on a world with two moons and trees with ribbon-like leaves, and he is holding a strange weapon, a kind of recoilless pistol. In his shop, he makes a modified version of the weapon, and when he tests it, it breaks loose from the workbench and slams into a wall hard enough to shatter the bricks. Meanwhile, astronomers trace the signal to an asteroid, M 387, and send a radio signal to it. In response, the asteroid changes its signal. With the help of Holmes, a yacht builder, Keller, an electronics expert, and several workmen, Joe builds a small spaceship propelled by a reactionless drive based on his modification of the recoilless pistol. Just in time, the ship is finished, and with Holmes, Keller, Sandy, and Sandy's sister Pam aboard, Joe lifts off just as the police arrive to end the project. Pursued by Nike missiles, Joe takes the ship into space and heads for Asteroid M 387. After eleven days of travel, they arrive at the asteroid and see only a radio mast and the entrance to a tunnel. When they fly their ship into the tunnel, a door closes behind them, lights come on, and the tunnel fills with air and artificial gravity. Finding the air breathable, the five impromptu astronauts explore the asteroid. They discover that it is a vast empty fortress with unknown weapons still in their racks and a control room where the fluting signal originates Murray Leinster Billee J. Stallings,Jo-an J.
