

A background image of a sunset over a body of water. The sky is a mix of blue and orange, with a seagull in flight in the upper right. The water is dark and reflects the light from the sky.

We shall go on to the end. We shall fight on the seas and oceans, we shall defend our island, whatever the cost may be. We shall fight on the beaches, we shall fight on the landing grounds, we shall fight in the fields and in the streets, we shall fight in the hills; we shall never surrender.

What Shall We Defend:

Must We Defend Nazis? Richard Delgado, Jean Stefancic, 2018-01-31 A controversial argument for reconsidering the limits of free speech Swirling in the midst of the resurgence of neo Nazi demonstrations hate speech and acts of domestic terrorism are uncomfortable questions about the limits of free speech The United States stands apart from many other countries in that citizens have the power to say virtually anything without legal repercussions But in the case of white supremacy does the First Amendment demand that we defend Nazis In Must We Defend Nazis legal experts Richard Delgado and Jean Stefancic argue that it should not Updated to consider the white supremacy demonstrations and counter protests in Charlottesville and debates about hate speech on campus and on the internet the book offers a concise argument against total unchecked freedom of speech Delgado and Stefancic instead call for a system of free speech that takes into account the harms that hate speech can inflict upon disempowered marginalized people They examine the prevailing arguments against regulating speech and show that they all have answers They also show how limiting free speech would work in a legal framework and offer suggestions for activist lawyers and judges interested in approaching the hate speech controversy intelligently As citizens are confronting free speech in contention with equal dignity access and respect Must We Defend Nazis puts aside clichés that clutter First Amendment thinking and presents a nuanced position that recognizes the needs of our increasingly diverse society
