

HOW RED WINE IS MADE

WINE FOLLY

Harvest grapes

The weather determines when to harvest most of the time. The grapes are harvested, then they are sorted and only those grapes that are suitable for wine are kept.

Prepare grapes

Stems and seeds get discarded. Some wineries ferment whole clusters of red grapes. The seeds in crushed white grapes contribute their own flavors and tannins, having been in contact with the grapes.

Clarification

Clarifying or "fining" agents such as egg whites or vegetable protein (like casein powder) "bind" with proteins in the juice. After the particles have been removed, the juice is clear.

Press

After the fermentation process, the juice is pressed out of the skins and stems. The remaining solids are called pomace. Some wineries use pomace to make brandy.

Fermentation

Wine makers use yeast to convert the sugar in the juice into alcohol. The yeast also produces carbon dioxide, which is released from the wine. Some wineries use natural yeast from the skins of the grapes.

Add yeast

Wine makers use yeast to convert the sugar in the juice into alcohol. The yeast also produces carbon dioxide, which is released from the wine. Some wineries use natural yeast from the skins of the grapes.

Bottling

Bottling is done with several steps. The wine is filtered, then it is bottled. Some wineries use cork, while others use screw caps. The wine is then stored in a dark, cool place.

Malolactic

In some wines, a bacteria or yeast called malolactic bacteria converts malic acid into lactic acid. This process is called malolactic fermentation and it gives the wine a softer, creamier texture.

Aging

Red wine is often aged in oak barrels for several months to several years. The barrels contain natural yeasts and other microorganisms that can affect the wine's flavor and texture.

Blending

The winemaker blends grapes from different vineyards together to create the final wine. The winemaker often uses oak barrels to age the wine before bottling.

Bottle aging

Some wines are aged in glass bottles for several years before being sold.
