Water Security for Agriculture: Atma Nirbhar Farmers—‘Water-Smart’ & ‘Climate-Smart’ Action - 2047 Prof. Shrikant Kalamkar, Dr. Kirit Shelat IAS (Rtd.), Dr. Suresh Acharya, 2024-05-15 India is an agriculture economy where land and water are two key natural resources upon which farmers depend for their livelihoods and development. Farmers' development depends upon interactions of these and other resources, institutions, actions, and policies, and their ultimate outcomes. It would be naive to perceive that all rural poverty problems could be solved through improving the poor's access to water alone through development of irrigated area in rainfed conditions. However, though water is only a single element in the poverty equation, it plays a disproportionately powerful role through its wider impacts on such factors as food and other essential agricultural production. Water is one of the most critical inputs for agriculture. The availability of adequate water for irrigation is a key factor in achieving higher productivity. However, the poor efficiency of conventional irrigation systems has not only reduced the anticipated outcome of investments towards water resource development but has also resulted in environmental problems like water logging and soil salinity, thereby adversely affecting crop yields. As a result, water is required to be stored and utilized for meeting the demands of different sectors throughout the year. Efficient water management requires sustainable development of the available surface and ground water resources and their optimal utilizations, including enhanced use of micro irrigation systems. In order to meet the challenge of Food Security, first there is a need to understand the need of water security. Therefore, three national interaction meets were organized to deliberate on climate change and its impact on water cycle, water security, and that in turn on Food Security.

Urban Water Conflicts Bernard Barraque, 2011-12-02 Urban water conflicts manifested first in Europe in the 19th century and are observed nowadays in various forms throughout the world, in particular in developing countries. Main causes of these conflicts are characterized by complex socioeconomic and institutional issues related to urban water management. The debate about public water services see Developing and Managing Community Water Supplies Jan Davis, Gerry Garvey, Michael Wood, 1993 This book discusses the issues and stages in the development of water supplies from the initiation of a programme through to the community management of a supply system. The importance of involving all the members of a community in decisions about water provision is emphasised, as is the need to incorporate hygiene education.

Climate Change and the Sustainable Use of Water Resources Walter Leal Filho, 2011-09-29 The book explores the geo-chemical, physical, social, and economic impacts of climate change on water supplies. It contains examples and case studies from a wide range of countries and addresses the need to promote sustainable water use across the world.

Water: Economics, Management and Demand T. Franks, M. Kay, L.E.D. Smith, 2002-11-01 This book forms the proceedings of the 18th European conference on irrigation and drainage. Water is not a free commodity and demand is becoming more and more intense for its allocation. This book focuses on the role of irrigation and drainage in the debate on water and will be used by
