Long before the first Stonehenge monument was built, the area was a busy Neolithic site. The site was used for over 2,000 years, from around 3000 BC to the Iron Age.

Over 100,000 flint tools have been found at the site, including axes, knives and spearheads.

The site was also used for religious and ceremonial purposes. The Neolithic people built a large circular enclosure around the site, which was used for rituals and ceremonies.

The site was also used for agriculture. The Neolithic people grew crops and raised animals. The site was a busy place, and the Neolithic people lived in small huts made of stone and mud.

The site was also used for trade. The Neolithic people traded goods and services with other Neolithic sites.
