SYLVIA PLATH

*I wanted each and every one of them,
but choosing one means losing all the rest,
and, as I sat there, unable to decide,
the figs began to wrinkle and go black, and,
one by one, they plopped to the ground at my feet.*

champion college footballer suddenly confronted by Wall Street and a business suit, his days of glory shrunk to a little gold cup on his mantel with a date engraved on it like the date on a tombstone.

I saw my life branching out before me like the green fig-tree in the story.

From the tip of every branch, like a fat purple fig, a wonderful future beckoned and winked. One fig was a husband and a happy home and children, and another fig was a famous poet and another fig was a brilliant professor, and another fig was Europe and Africa and South America, and another fig was Constantin and Socrates and Attila and a pack of other servers with queer names and off-beat professions, and another fig was an Olympic lady crew champion, and beyond and above these figs were many more figs I couldn't quite make out.

I saw myself sitting in the crotch of this fig-tree, starving to death, just because I couldn't make up my mind which of the figs I would choose. I wanted each and every one of them, but choosing one meant losing all the rest, and, as I sat there, unable to decide, the figs began to wrinkle and go black, and, one by one, they plopped to the ground at my feet.

Constantin's restaurant smelt of herbs and spices and sour cream. All the time I had been in New York I had never found such a restaurant. It was like the heavenly Hamburger places, where the food is served on silver platters and soup-of-the-day and fresh bread and a very clean counter facing a long glass display case.

There were no stairs to climb down seven dimly-lit passages to the kitchen, and the walls were smoke-dark walls, like so many of the Swiss lakes and Japanese
