

Animal Tissues

In animals, cells are grouped together to form tissues. These tissues vary in their structure, function, and origin. The four important tissues in an animal body are epithelial, connective, muscular and nervous tissues.

Plant Tissues

Plant tissues come in several forms: vascular, epidermal, ground, and meristematic. Each type of tissue consists of different types of cells, has different functions, and is located in different places.

Exchange Surfaces

Organisms must take in food and water, and substances, from their environment. Plants also need to remove waste products. Small organisms have a large surface area relative to their volume, so substances can move in and out of their bodies easily. The size of their body surface area defines how much they can absorb. Inside their bodies, substances move from the surface to the rest of the body. The size of their body surface area defines how much they can absorb.

Testing for Starch

In the presence of iodine, it is possible to detect carbohydrates using iodine. For example, if iodine is added to a potato, it will turn black. Benedict's reagent can be used to test for glucose.

Gaseous Exchange Surfaces

- Key features:
- Good ventilation
 - Good circulation
 - A large surface area
 - Moist surface
 - Short diffusion distance
 - Concentration gradient
 - Movement of gases

Testing For Sugars

AQA GCSE Biology Organisation Knowledge Organiser

Testing for Proteins

- Use a pestle and mortar to grind up a small sample of food.
- Transfer the ground up food into a small beaker. Then add distilled water.
- Stir the mixture so that some of the food dissolves in the water.
- Filter using a funnel with filter paper to obtain as clear a solution as possible.
- The solution should be collected in a conical flask.
- Put 2 cm³ of this solution into a test tube.
- Add 2 cm³ of Biuret solution to the solution in the test tube. Shake gently to mix.
- Note any colour change. Proteins will turn the solution pink or purple.

A purple colour indicates protein is present

Digestion

The GI tract is a series of hollow organs joined in a long, twisting tube from the mouth to the anus. The hollow organs that make up the GI tract are the mouth, oesophagus, stomach, small intestine, large intestine, and anus. The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are the solid organs of the digestive system.
