Using Teams In Higher Education:

Teaching with Team Projects in Higher Education Janice Whatley, Chrissi Nerantzi, The book is divided into five parts representing five key issues discussed at the workshop with the call for contributions to this book framed around the following topic areas 1 Organisation team size and composition supporting with sessions such as lectures and tutorials sourcing projects ways in which tutors monitor progress and provide guidance 2 Management strategies and tools for teams to use for project management and ways in which students manage their project progress 3 Assessment issues of individual participation how to assess learning skills and personal development Assessment of process and or product and fairness in group assessing 4 Development of skills using team projects to provide opportunities getting students to recognise them and reflection on learning and self development 5 Differences from the workplace preparing students for global team working

Positive Psychology in Higher Education Acacia Parks, 2014-01-21 Positive psychology the scientific study of happiness is a rapidly burgeoning field and in no area more so than education More departments than ever are offering courses in positive psychology and demand for these courses is consistently high Graduate programs offering concentrations in positive psychology have appeared at both masters and doctoral level Educational institutions have expressed interest in using principles of positive psychology to inform institutional structure faculty development and pedagogy Positive psychology has been taught and applied in higher education for almost as long as it has existed as a field but there is little in the way of published literature that brings all of these developments together The chapters in this volume represent the use of positive psychology at all levels of higher education from institutional practices and curricular development to pedagogy and the teaching of positive psychology content itself This book provides an in depth look at this exciting area of applied positive psychology which will be relevant to educators and administrators alike This book is based on a special issue of The Journal of Positive Psychology

Using Teams in Higher Education: Cultural Foundations for Productive Change Susan H. Frost, 1999-01-11 In both conceptual and practical ways the teams universities and colleges use the cultures in which these teams succeed or fail and the quality and value of the work they accomplish intersect both to provide opportunities for and take advantage of strategic change This issue of New Directions for Institutional Research explores those intersections with particular emphasis on the margins for mutual gain Drawing on research and practice from higher education where teams are used with varying degrees of effectiveness and from business where teams are linked to survival the authors address questions of culture especially as they can affect significant aspects of teamwork The authors also explore the theory and practice related to different types of teams and the dynamics that influence their success They then present ideas and resources practitioners might use from examining case studies to using applied models from other settings Designed to be both provocative and helpful this volume provides guidance for useful change This is the 100th issue of the quarterly journal New Directions for Institutional Research

Building Teams for Collaborative Learning in Higher Education Stacy A. Streich,2015 Higher education institutions need to prepare faculty for teaching collaboration in the classroom Career service advisors state that a common question asked by prospective employers looking at hiring graduating students is how well can the applicant work on a team Shortcomings in developing collaborative learning continue to occur in the classroom due to students and instructors not experiencing success with the use of team projects Effective teams come from students energy being used to solve problems make decisions and apply knowledge to real world settings A majority of employers 56% express satisfaction with the job colleges and universities are doing to prepare graduates for success in the workplace but more than two in five indicate there is room for improvement Hart Research Associates 2013 The desired outcome is having more graduates with a solid background in team building and group dynamic skills The positive results in teams and their member achieving balance between individual autonomy and collective action Instructors were interviewed about issues they have in using teams in their classes Based on the results recommendations were made for using teams more effectively
