U.S. DECISIVELY ELECTS FIRST BLACK PRESIDENT DEMOCRATS EXPAND CONTROL OF CONGRESS

President-elect Barack Obama, with wife Michelle and daughters Sasha, 7, and Malia, 15, greets more than 200,000 people celebrating his victory in Grant Park, in his home town of Chicago.

Measured Response To Financial Crisis Sealed the Election

 By Anne E. Koenig
 Washington Post Staff Writer

Sen. Barack Obama, so steady in public, did not hide his reaction when he announced his top advisers to meet with him in Chicago on Sept. 24. His ground-election campaign had gone stale. For weeks, he had watched Sen. John McCain mount the dog in the man, driving the news coverage at the White House Black College, in Washington, D.C., and suddenly showing huge crowds with his new running mate, Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin.

Commenting that McCain was in the office of David Axelrod, his chief strategist, Obama was blunt: "I was there to get work done."

"He said, 'You know, maybe we can just win it on the issues. But I don't think so,'" recalled senior adviser Anita Dunn. "With the debate approach and just seven weeks until the election, his change to everybody was 'Geez, we had to do this.'"

And then, the next morning, a global earthquake hit. Lehman Brothers, the giant investment firm, filed for bankruptcy, triggering the biggest corporate collapse in U.S. history and an international financial meltdown, and transforming the presidential race.

It was a moment neither the senator from Illinois nor his advisers had anticipated and one for which they were uniquely prepared. In the days that followed, the newly classified Obama team became more aggressive, with a message they had refined over the summer. The candidate himself, criticized as too mild, too cerebral and too detached, suddenly had the opportunity to show his qualities to be measured.

For McCain, already struggling with the economic

A DAY OF TRANSFORMATION

America's History Gives Way to Its Future

 By Kevin Marra
 Washington Post Staff Writer

After a day of runaway lines that divided blocks, of rallies building on raves and drummers maddening on street corners, the momentous significance of Barack Obama's election finally began to sink into the language. The magnitude of his win suggested that the country itself might be in a gravitational well, a vortex that some were slow to recognize.

Team Obama, not only for Obama's historic achievement, but because many were finally discovering that perhaps they had underestimated possibility in America.

When the senator from Illinois finished her vote being recorded at her polling station in Milton, Mass., she stood still for a moment with her 8-year-old son, Isaac. "My heart was full, I could scarcely breathe," she said. "What I've been forced to acknowledge is there has been a shift — it's not a week change. But there's been a decided shift in the meaning of race. It's not an ending. It's a beginning."

What kind of beginning? In America, some were searching with late into the night, some groping change and others, handclapping with emotion. "What does this mean for our country? Our power or gain or selfishness?" Could new hope be harnessed to create new solutions? Is America ready to go? It will be a long time before the answers are clear. The campaign that began for Obama 21 months ago had raised in stark terms whether America was ready for a black president. Last night's answer — a resounding yes — raises the next question: How much will we really do to make it so?

When McCain learned last night that the nation had voted

Sen. Barack Obama of Illinois was elected the nation's 44th president yesterday, riding a resounding message of change and a new national exhortation of hope to become the first African American to ascend to the White House.

Obama, 47, the son of a Kenyan father and a white mother from Kansas, led a tide of Democratic victories across the nation in Democratic-leaning states. John McCain of Arizona, a 20-year veteran of Washington, who could not overcome his connections to President Bush's increasingly unpopular administration.

Standing before a crowd of more than 200,000 who had waited for hours at Chicago's Grant Park, Obama acknowledged his own accomplishment and the dreams of his supporters.

"I know in my heart that there are still doubts that America is a place where all things are possible, but I know that the dream of our founders is alive in our time, and will continue the power of our democracy tonight in great measure," he said, just before midnight Eastern time.

"Our road ahead will be long. Our climb will be steep. We may not get there in one year or even one term, but America — I have never been more hopeful than I am tonight that we will get there. I promise you — we as a people will get there."

The historic Election Day brought millions of voters, from lines of waiting people nationwide and a new era of Democratic dominance, more than 100 million votes for about the 60 votes needed for a veto-proof majority in the Senate. In the House, Obama's victory clinched the lead to their already sizable advantage and redefining the nation's political landscape.

Democrats will use their new legislative agenda to address an economy and foreign policy agenda that Bush has largely blocked for eight years. They will also push to

THE AGENDA

Hard Choices And Challenges Follow Triumph

 By Dan Banz
 Washington Post Staff Writer

After a victory of historic significance, Barack Obama will inherit problems of his own. He was inaugurated at the depths of the Great Depression, and he has a new president's hand to shake with the challenge Obama will face as he starts his presidency.

At home, Obama must revive an economy in steeper decline than any since the 1930s, and he will have to deal with the war in Iraq and the Taliban in Afghanistan. He must also plan to change the country and the world's political, economic and social landscape.

Obama's winning percentage appears likely to be the largest of any Democrat in the history of the United States, and makes him the first since Jimmy Carter in 1976 to garner more than 50.1 percent. That means he will have a more than 50 percent congressional majority. Democrats also have a lead over McCain in the Senate and likely to add significantly to their strength in the House.

But with these advantages come hard choices. Among them will be deciding how far to go in the war in Iraq and the re-election of President Bush and the Republicans. Obama's victory represents an end to Democratic governance. Interpreting his victory will be the only challenge that will be made as he prepares
