Land, livelihoods and identities: inter-community conflicts in East Africa Laura A. Young, Korir Sing'Oei, 2011-12-05 In resource scarce East Africa minority groups face major challenges over the control of and access to land and natural resources Minorities find themselves competing with other communities with the state and with corporate interests for control of resources upon which they depend for their livelihood culture and future development This report describes the situation of selected minorities and their neighbouring groups in Kenya Uganda and South Sudan's Jonglei State As globalization population explosion and climate change converge to increase the demand for land and other resources these communities face extreme livelihood challenges vulnerability to conflict and ongoing discrimination Despite progressive constitutional and national policy statements it remains a huge challenge for minority groups to use these legal regimes to deal with conflict over land and natural resources Instead the formal law is often used against communities to dispossess them of their land This report documents case studies from a diverse array of communities dealing with different multiple types of conflict from mineral extraction to cattle rustling to drought to inter ethnic violence to the creation of national parks for tourism Minority women often bear the brunt of conflicts over natural resources Security operations to quell violence or evict communities expose women to multiple violations of their rights Moreover violence between communities leads to attacks on women and children and directly impacts women's particular property rights within traditional community structures This report highlights that communities themselves are initiating the most effective strategies of dealing with interethnic violence based on customary practices But current conditions of land scarcity state intervention and resource extraction are straining or obliterating customary management in many communities Among other key recommendations this report urges governments in the regions discussed to fully implement their national policy directives on land and natural resources which are generally progressive with respect to minority rights develop guidelines on what constitutes participatory and effective community consultation around land and natural resource extraction based on free prior and informed consent and recognise the value of indigenous peoples knowledge of resource management and of customary practise especially related to women's rights to hold and use land
