"Ulster stands at the crossroads"

Captain Terence O'Neill, Prime Minister of Northern Ireland, 1968

By 1968, tensions were running high in Northern Ireland. Civil rights marches were more frequent, and counter protests were organised regularly. Clashes on the streets became an almost everyday occurrence.
