Us Leadership Perceptions Of The Soviet Problem Since 1945:

U.S. Leadership Perceptions of the Soviet Problem Since 1945, 1982 For 35 years the Soviet Union has presented American political leaders with their most pressing foreign policy problem Throughout this period the Soviet Union like other countries has undergone constant change Although this change has worked to reshape the perceptions of American leaders it has not ended an ongoing debate in the United States about the essential character of the Soviet system This in turn has made consensus on a long term strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union difficult to achieve In an effort to probe the roots of the ongoing dissension in the U S foreign policy community this report analyzes the three early postwar alternatives termination by accommodation termination by victory and long term management and shows how the early debates on these alternatives influenced later American thinking In addition the report suggests some of the underlying reasons why termination appealed to those who were confronted for the first time with the Soviet problem and why despite the standoff of the past 35 years termination continues to exert a residual appeal with elites and with the general public Author U.S. Leadership Perceptions of the Soviet Problem Since 1945 John Van Oudenaren, Rand Corporation, 1982 For 35 years the Soviet Union has presented American political leaders with their most difficult foreign policy and defense problems Throughout this period the Soviet Union like other countries has undergone constant change Although this change has worked to reshape the perceptions of American leaders it has not ended an ongoing debate in the United States about the essential character of the Soviet system and appropriate U S policies for dealing with the USSR There remains no consensus on a long term American strategy for dealing with the Soviet Union In an effort to probe the roots of the ongoing dissension in the U S foreign policy community regarding Soviet policy this report analyzes the three early postwar alternatives termination by accommodation termination by victory and long term management and shows how the early debates on these alternatives influenced subsequent American policy thinking In addition the report suggests some of the underlying reasons why a termination approach appealed to those who were confronted for the first time with the Soviet problem and why despite the standoff of the past 35 years termination continues to exert a residual appeal for both elites and the general public U.S. Leadership Perceptions of the Soviet Problems Since 1945 Rand Corporation, J.V. Narrative and the Making of US National Security Ronald R. Krebs, 2015-08-25 Dominant narratives from the Cold War consensus to the War on Terror have often served as the foundation for debates over national security Weaving current challenges past failures and triumphs and potential futures into a coherent tale with well defined characters and plot lines these narratives impart meaning to global events define the boundaries of legitimate politics and thereby shape national security policy However we know little about why or how such narratives rise and fall Drawing on insights from diverse fields Narrative and the Making of US National Security offers novel arguments about where these dominant narratives come from how they become dominant and when they collapse It evaluates these arguments carefully against evidence drawn from US
