

Wage Formation and Labor Market Segmentation

- Labor market segmentation: situation where observationally identical workers receive different wages depending on their sector of employment.

Induced by various factors:

- government intervention in the form of minimum wages;
- trade unions imposing wage premium for members;
- efficiency wages: resulting from nutritional factors (Bliss and Stern, 1978), turnover costs (Stiglitz, 1974) or productivity considerations (Stiglitz, 1982).

Marshall, 2006 The unemployment rate is the number of unemployed workers divided by the total civilian labour force which includes both the unemployed and those with jobs all those willing and able to work for pay In practice measuring the number of unemployed workers actually seeking work is notoriously difficult There are several different methods for measuring the number of unemployed workers Each method has its own biases and the different systems make comparing unemployment statistics between countries especially those with different systems difficult This book brings together diverse new research on this important area of economics      Unemployment in Europe Joan Muysken, Chris De Neubourg, 1989-03-01 By an international forum of contributors this is the result of a conference organized by the Department of Economics of the University of Limburg and the European Production Study Group All aspects of labour market research were discussed relating them to the unemployment situation in Europe      The Economics and Policies of Integration — a Finnish Perspective Kari Alho, Mika Erkkilä, Markku Kotilainen, 2012-12-06 European integration has come a long way since the first steps in the aftermath of the Second World War At that time the neutral European countries chose to stay outside the European Economic Community Those countries that wanted less ambitious cooperation formed the European Free Trade Association Increasing trade dependence between the two groupings was institutionalised when they signed free trade agreements with each other creating thus a wider European free trade area in manufactures The strong push towards deepening integration among EC countries manifested in the Single European Act in 1985 and the dismantling of non tariff barriers to trade and factor flows in the EC by 1993 made it necessary for EFTA countries to secure access on equal conditions to their most important export market and thus prevent trade diversion The ensuing agreement on the European Economic Area responded to these demands but did not resolve the apparent asymmetry in EEA decision making This emanated from the supremacy of EC legislation over EEA rules thus making EFTA countries passively adjust to EC norms Consequently Finland applied for membership in the EC in March 1992 with effect from 1995 The latest phase in the integration process the Treaty on European Union has an aim to further deepening e.g. the formation of the economic and monetary union by 1999      Money and the Natural Rate of Unemployment Finn Ostrup, 2000-04-13 The prevailing view among economists and policy makers is that money has no impact on production in a longer term characterised by full price and wage flexibility and rational expectations This book presents a revisionist view of monetary policy and monetary regimes It presents several new mechanisms indicating that money affects long term production The consequent policy implications are also discussed including the uses of monetary policy and monetary regimes in achieving macroeconomic goals the impact of an independent central bank the effects of a movement from floating exchange rates to fixed exchange rates in a monetary union In addition to the theoretical and policy discussions the book also contains a comprehensive survey of the current state of scholarship in this area Designed as a textbook for advanced undergraduate and graduate students in macroeconomics labour economics and finance this book will also appeal to scholars and policy makers
