

Wealth Distribution vs Consumption Patterns

Wealth in India is far more concentrated than consumption suggests: the top 1 percent owns over 40 percent of national wealth, while the bottom 50 percent holds under 5 percent. By contrast, the consumption-based Gini sits near 0.25, implying smoother spending across households. High-income groups save and invest heavily in real estate, equities, and inheritance amplifying wealth gaps hidden from routine consumption surveys. Poorer families often smooth expenses through borrowing, remittances, or in-kind resources, masking persistent deprivation. Luxury outlays like foreign travel or high-end art rarely enter consumption data, further understating true inequality. This disconnect shows why relying on spending alone underestimates the scale of asset concentration and long-run economic divides in India.
