The Tulpa:

Engineering Imaginary Sentience: The Psychological Subculture of the Tulpa Phenomenon Simon Abernathy, 2026-03-19

In the hidden corners of the internet a growing community is engaging in a psychological practice that borders on the impossible They are dedicating hundreds of hours to systematically hallucinating sentient independent consciousnesses inside their own minds They are creating Tulpas Far removed from the involuntary delusions of clinical schizophrenia Tulpamancy is a deliberate highly structured mental discipline Practitioners actively split their cognitive processes to generate a companion who thinks speaks and acts autonomously But what drives a perfectly healthy adult to permanently alter their own psychological architecture This fascinating deep dive uncovers the profound crisis of modern digital isolation It explores the extreme lengths to which the human brain will go to simulate connection when the physical world feels terrifyingly empty You will explore the neurological boundaries of identity and the shocking plasticity of human consciousness Venture into the mind s most uncharted territory Understand the mechanics of manufactured sentience and what the Tulpa phenomenon reveals about our desperate hardwired need for community What is Already Known Seán
