

Power and Democracy in Denmark: Still a Viable Democracy

Peter Munk Christiansen* and Lise Togeby†

In its final report, the Danish Democracy and Power Study (1998–2004) pointed to a number of serious democratic problems such as declining political party membership, a growing gap between a competent and resourceful majority and a marginalised minority, the growing influence of the media, the transfer of power from the political to the judicial system, and the democratic deficit associated with European Union membership. However, the report also concluded that overall democratic development in the last 30–40 years has been surprisingly positive. This article assesses the development of democracy in Denmark in relation to the parliamentary chain of governance: the standard used in the final report of the majority of the Norwegian power study group. The conclusion is that, in the case of Denmark, democratic development has not – as the parliamentary committee initially expected – resulted in a systematic weakening of the parliamentary chain of governance.

A report issued by the Danish Parliament in 1997 states that recent developments in Denmark are ‘experienced as a tangible loss of democratic influence and hence diminished trust in the strength and relevance of democratic decision-making processes’ (Beretning nr. 6, 1997, 5).¹ Democratically elected politicians felt they were losing control of democratic development due to the internationalisation, decentralisation and privatisation of public tasks. The report also expressed concerns about a population that was becoming more difficult to control because people ‘demanded greater individual influence on [their] own situation and opportunities’ (Beretning nr. 6, 1997, 5). The conditions for political governance and control were deteriorating; things were headed in the wrong direction.

Based on this perception, the Danish Folketing decided in 1997 to launch a so-called ‘power study’ (or officially, ‘An Analysis of Democracy and Power in Denmark’). The aim was to analyse the state of Danish democracy at the close of the twentieth century, including more recent developments.²
