

Short-Run Labor Demand Curve

- The demand curve for labor indicates how many workers the firm would hire at each possible wage, holding the quantity of capital constant.
- The short-run labor demand curve is downward sloping because, although the marginal product of labor is positive, hiring additional workers reduces the marginal product (Law of Diminishing Returns).
- Because $w = VMP_E$ at every profit-maximizing amount of employment, the VMP_E curve is coincident with the short-run demand curve for labor.
