Herbert N. G. Newlyn

The Significance Of Consciousness:

The Significance of Consciousness Charles P. Siewert, 1998 Charles Siewert presents a distinctive approach to consciousness that emphasizes our first person knowledge of experience and argues that we should grant consciousness understood in this way a central place in our conception of mind and intentionality Written in an engaging manner that makes its recently controversial topic accessible to the thoughtful general reader this book challenges theories that equate consciousness with a functional role or with the mere availability of sensory information to cognitive capacities Siewert argues that the notion of phenomenal consciousness slighted in some recent theories can be made evident by noting our reliance on first person knowledge and by considering from the subject s point of view the difference between having and lacking certain kinds of experience This contrast is clarified by careful attention to cases both actual and hypothetical indicated by research on brain damaged patients ability to discriminate visually without conscious visual experience what has become known as blindsight In addition Siewert convincingly defends such approaches against objections that they make an illegitimate appeal to introspection Experiences that are conscious in Siewert s sense differ from each other in ways that only what is conscious can in phenomenal character and having this character gives them intentionality In Siewert s view consciousness is involved not only in the intentionality of sense experience and imagery but in that of nonimagistic ways of thinking as well Consciousness is pervasively bound up with intelligent perception and conceptual thought it is not mere sensation or raw feel Having thus understood consciousness we can better recognize how for many of us it possesses such deep intrinsic value that life without it would be little or no better than death

The Meaning of Consciousness Carl Gustaf Erickson,1922 The Significance of Humans in the Universe Luke VandenBerghe,2019-05-21 The singularity of the Big Bang caused the universe As far as we know we humans are the only intelligent species in the universe The inanimate universe is the progenitor of life Humans form an essential part of the universe because we are its consciousness We humans are the cognitive part of the universe

Dresser,2014-01-14 There is a tradition that certain subjects are sacred and can never become matters of scientific inquiry One of these ineffable subjects is the relationship of God to man in the highest ranges of human experience particularly in those beatific moments when in expectant solitude or social worship the soul communes with the Father But in these self conscious days psychology has been triumphantly carried into all fields and if psychological descriptions have sometimes been irreverent it is a question not of retreat but of the analysis which affords the most appreciative description The success which has attended the psychology of religion shows that very much is to be gained by undertaking an account of the higher experiences of men What must be said in behalf of the sacred or ineffable may be added when science has achieved its utmost In the following pages I have ventured to mediate between science and religion by endeavoring to be appreciatively true to the everlasting realities of the religious life while taking account of and passing beyond the results attained by modern psychology If no subject should more deeply inspire our reverence than that of the presence of God none is more worthy of our thought Accordingly I offer what I believe to be a contribution to the study of problems which pertain to a field midway between the philosophy of religion and constructive idealism Advocates of various points of view may meet in this common field to study questions that are rightfully prior to the development of their special views Each may make such qualification as he will but all must be concerned with the issues here shown to be fundamental
