

According to the transactional theory, learning language can be characterized as follows:

- 1) Readers and writers play active roles in the reading and writing processes.
- 2) Meaning is created during reading and writing in a two-way transaction between readers or writers and the texts they read and write.
- 3) Readers and writers draw on their own experiences and language skills to bring texts to life.
- 4) There are multiple possible interpretations of a single text.
