

Story Premise

The premise is what your story is about. Like a movie poster, the premise shows the essence of what the audience can expect. Readers prefer a high concept—a catchy one-line book description they immediately understand and want to read. Writers use the premise to guide the story's development, and in one sentence, gain a strategic sense of the character, plot, theme, and outcome.

Example

Star Wars: When a princess falls into mortal danger, a young man uses his skills as a fighter to save her and defeat the evil forces of a galactic empire.

—John Truby

Start Here

Understand the difference between an idea and a premise. An idea or concept refers to the basis for a novel. The premise gives a story's big picture and writer's development strategy.

Start with a killer concept. "... come up with hundreds of ideas, toss out the ones that don't grab you, and then nurture and develop what's left." —James Scott Bell

- Use your passions to narrow your focus based on your story likes and dislikes.
- List your favorite books and films to identify specific story elements that excite you (e.g., characters, plots, themes, genres, descriptions).

List the premise possibilities. Write several versions of the premise based on your killer concept. Include a sense of the character, the action that takes place, the effect it has, and the final outcome. Examples by John Truby:

- The Godfather: The youngest son of a Mafia family takes revenge on the man who shot his father and becomes the new Godfather.
- Casablanca: A tough American expatriate rediscovers an old flame only to give her up so that he can fight the Nazis.

Evaluate your draft premise. Is the premise suitable for a novel? Does it offer an interesting landscape and room for details? Will it entice readers to buy, sounding original and plausible?

Validate your premise's appeal. Are you passionate about writing a full-length novel based on this premise? Will readers care enough about this premise to buy your novel? Can you find where people actually buy such stories? Will the competition allow your book to compete?

Specify the lead character's moral choices. What inner conflicts will the lead character experience? How will the character's choices cause moral dilemmas? What will readers learn and will those lessons resonate with the target audience?

Determine who or what opposes the lead character. Who will oppose your lead character and the conflict engages readers? What else will cause conflicts, adding interest to the story?

Select the best lead character. Which character do you relate to? In book reviews, which characters resonate with readers? Do your passions guide the character selection?

Choose a storytelling strategy. How will you tell the story (e.g., point of view, setting, timeframe, culture, opposition, genre conventions)? What will the story convey to readers? Which masterworks serve as your novel's model?
