Glucose metabolism

Glucose is the main source of energy for the body's cells. It is transported from the liver to the cells through the bloodstream. In the cells, glucose is broken down into pyruvate, which is then used to produce energy. The liver also stores glucose as glycogen for later use.

Glucagon signals the liver to convert glycogen to glucose and release the glucose into the blood.

Function of insulin

Insulin is a hormone that allows glucose to enter the cells. It is produced by the beta cells of the pancreas. In people with diabetes, the pancreas does not produce enough insulin, or the body's cells do not respond to it properly.

Action of insulin

Type I

In Type I diabetes, the pancreas does not produce enough insulin. This causes glucose to build up in the blood, leading to high blood sugar levels.

Type II

In Type II diabetes, the body's cells do not respond properly to insulin. This means that even though the pancreas produces insulin, it cannot do its job of allowing glucose to enter the cells.

Normal

The insulin allows glucose to enter the cells and be used for energy. This keeps blood sugar levels normal.

Insulin stimulates cells to take up glucose

What is diabetes?

Diabetes is a chronic condition that affects the way the body uses glucose. It is caused by either the pancreas not producing enough insulin or the body's cells not responding to the insulin that is produced.

- Symptoms of diabetes
- Increased thirst and hunger
  - Frequent urination
  - Blurred vision
  - Slow-healing sores
  - Skin infections
  - Unexplained fatigue, weight loss, and mood changes

The beta cells in the pancreas convert it into glucose and store it

Health complications

Kidney damage

High blood sugar can damage the kidneys over time. This is called diabetic kidney disease. It can lead to kidney failure, which may require dialysis or a kidney transplant.

Vision problems

High blood sugar can cause changes in the shape of the lens in the eye, leading to blurry vision. It can also damage the blood vessels in the eye, leading to more serious complications like retinopathy.

Heart disease

High blood sugar increases the risk of heart disease and stroke. It can lead to atherosclerosis, where plaque builds up in the arteries, narrowing them and reducing blood flow.

Nerve damage

High blood sugar can damage the nerves in the body, leading to numbness, tingling, and pain. This is called diabetic neuropathy. It can also affect the nerves that control the digestive system, leading to problems like acid reflux and constipation.

Treatment and healthy lifestyle changes

Diabetes treatment involves a combination of medication, diet, and exercise. For Type I diabetes, insulin is essential. For Type II diabetes, lifestyle changes and oral medications are often the first step. Regular monitoring of blood sugar levels is crucial for managing the condition.
