What is epilepsy?

Epilepsy is a long-term condition characterized by recurrent, unprovoked seizures. It is caused by abnormal electrical activity in the brain, which can be triggered by a variety of factors, including genetic factors, brain injury, infection, and stroke. The condition is diagnosed based on a history of seizures, an EEG showing abnormal electrical activity, and imaging studies showing structural changes in the brain.

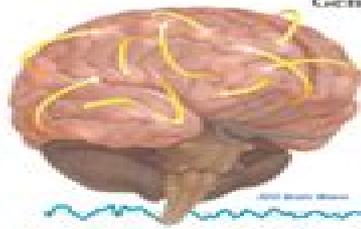

What is an epileptic seizure?

An epileptic seizure is a sudden, unprovoked burst of abnormal electrical activity in the brain. This activity can cause a variety of symptoms, including loss of consciousness, muscle spasms, and changes in behavior. Seizures are caused by a variety of factors, including genetic factors, brain injury, infection, and stroke.

Partial seizures are characterized by abnormal electrical activity in a specific area of the brain. This activity can cause a variety of symptoms, including changes in sensation, motor function, and awareness. Generalized seizures are characterized by abnormal electrical activity in both hemispheres of the brain. This activity can cause a variety of symptoms, including loss of consciousness, muscle spasms, and changes in behavior.

Generalized seizures

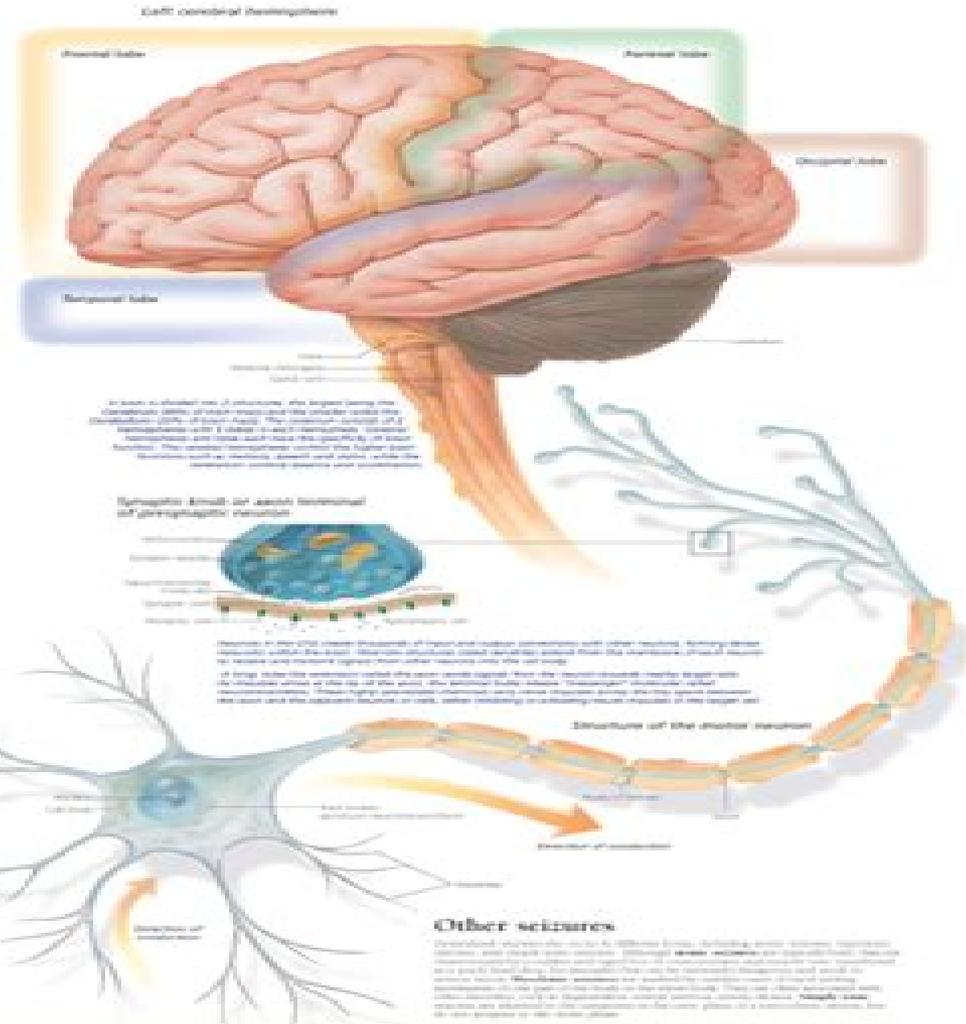

Generalized seizures involve abnormal electrical activity in both hemispheres of the brain. This activity can cause a variety of symptoms, including loss of consciousness, muscle spasms, and changes in behavior. There are several types of generalized seizures, including tonic-clonic seizures, absence seizures, and myoclonic seizures.

Partial (focal) seizures

Partial (focal) seizures involve abnormal electrical activity in a specific area of the brain. This activity can cause a variety of symptoms, including changes in sensation, motor function, and awareness. There are several types of partial seizures, including simple partial seizures, complex partial seizures, and partial seizures with impaired awareness.

Diagnosing and treating epilepsy
The diagnosis of epilepsy is based on a history of seizures, an EEG showing abnormal electrical activity, and imaging studies showing structural changes in the brain. Treatment options include anti-epileptic drugs, surgery, and dietary changes.

Managing your epilepsy
People with epilepsy should take their medication as prescribed and avoid triggers that can cause seizures. They should also avoid driving and swimming alone. Regular medical check-ups are important to monitor the effectiveness of treatment and to adjust the medication if necessary.
