The speed with which the soda cell through its allotted time depends on the temperature of the reacting ions. At about 50 degrees, Fahrenheit the mortal struggle lasts about 45 minutes and then the imitation cell becomes quiet and quiet, and has changed an exciting "creature" to a little soap.

OTHER forces besides those of osmotic pressure come into play in the lives of his colpoids, Professor Herrera explains, and these are the equal forces of surface tension and electrical charges in the droplets which have a tendency to become their like. Surface tension tends to make the spheroidal, but the currents induced by the chemical interchange of ions are order to go further, which Professor Herrera says are analogous to the streaming in living cells, he suggests an experiment for the student to test the possibility of a neglected field for research. He sets an artificial imitation of a soda solution might be suggested. The physical forces and electrical properties of the reacting bodies then become enormous. Professor Herrera's cell of soda solution is a spectacular artificial "creature," he has mimicked many other structures by means of other chemical substances. Organic acids, albumin and fats, but he discovered that his best results were obtained when certain mineral imceeded in obtaining in his microscope slide structures resembling isolated cells, spores, streptococcus chains, bacteria, and protoplasm.

One of his simplest methods of preparing a pseudo-protoplasm in his laboratory today is by sprinkling a bit of Merck's chemically prepared powdered egg albumin upon a drop of nitric acid on a microscope slide. Remarkably realistic structures arise which appear almost identical with the structure of living protoplasm. By varying the acid, Professor Herrera can vary the type of protoplasmic structure.

"These various experiments are not without biological significance," Pro-get its food. In the arm-like extensions of black soda drop which it uses to vampire grip on its rivals, Professor Herrera sees the counterparts of pseudopods of the living amoeba in the brook. And in the pseudopods' behavior of the organism becomes and more complicated, the physical and chemical reactions come so confused with what are instincts, at the bottom of which must lie, that they are completely of.

the scale of life is ascended and the behavior of the organism becomes and more complicated, the physical and chemical reactions come so confused with what are instincts, at the bottom of which must lie, that they are completely of.

The struggles of a man to get by robbing a bank or getting in another factory are as much the result of internal chemical reactions as the behavior of the caterpillar or the hydra in the brook, the amoeba in the sunny pool, or the black drop skipping about in the microscope. Professor Herrera Professor Herrera's conclusion is the result of 30 years' work in the field of colloid chemistry. He has discovered that the behavior of hitherto unexplained phenomena, which is based on the combination of various parts of the scientific world.
