Youth Activism in Environmental Politics, 2nd Edition Matt Henn,Sarah Pickard,2023-02-02 Recently important new research has emerged to explain the large intergenerational cleavages in values and political preferences in many contemporary societies In most established democracies and many newer democracies young people are more likely to possess progressive values and are much more cosmopolitan in their outlook socially liberal accepting of cultural diversity and outward looking than older generations They tend to reject mainstream electoral politics and authoritarian nationalist forms of populism in favour of alternative progressive political parties and movements Indeed there is burgeoning evidence of a global tendency towards young people s support for and participation in new styles of non institutionalised political action that seem to better fit their life styles and to permit the actualisation of their political aspirations Although there is a considerable body of existing literature that examines the rise of such values and political participation preferences there is little work that focuses on the relationship with the prioritisation of environmental issues and environmental activism as evidenced in the September 2019 global climate strikes The goal of the current Research Topic is to explore the contemporary realities and patterns of youth participation in environmental politics in different societies As such we welcome manuscripts of original research and conceptualization that address the different practices of youth as they seek to effect environmental change and also their motivations for doing so Contributions are welcome from scholars youth practitioners and activists operating in a range of different settings and using diverse disciplinary and multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary perspectives Committee on the Campus Environment Rutgers University. Committee on the Campus Environment, Robert Cottrol, 1995 Stumbling Toward Sustainability John C. Dernbach, 2002 In 1992 at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro the nations of the world agreed to implement an ambitious plan for ecologically sustainable human development This book is a comprehensive review of U S efforts to achieve such development since Rio The U S has unquestionably begun to take steps toward sustainable development Yet the nation is now far from being a sustainable society and in many respects is farther away than it was in 1992 Nevertheless legal and policy tools are available to put the U S on a direct path to sustainability This book brings together 42 distinguished experts from a variety of backgrounds and academic disciplines It is among the most thorough assessments ever conducted of U S law and policy concerning the environment Intercollegian ,1925

The Impact of Campus Environment Perceptions and Sense of Belonging on the Persistence Decisions of Students at a Rural Community College : Crystal T. Henry, 2020 Community college students are often excluded from persistence studies due to the unique characteristics of community colleges and its students Recent studies have heavily relied on retention models that do not adequately account for the role individual and campus culture plays in students persistence decisions Using Museus 2014 Culturally Engaging Campus Environment CECE model this cross sectional correlational study examined the impact of campus environment perceptions and sense of belonging on the persistence decisions of students at a rural community college in the southeastern part of the U S Correlation analyses were conducted to investigate the relationships between two independent variables campus environment perceptions and sense of belonging and one dependent variable students persistence decisions An analysis of variance ANOVA was used to determine if differences in campus environment perceptions and sense of belonging existed between racial and gender identity groups Lastly a t test was conducted to examine differences between residential and commuter students Utilizing the CECE Survey for Community Colleges Museus et al 2017 a total of 234 responses were analyzed The results revealed that students are more likely to persist when they have a positive perception of the campus environment It also revealed that students were more likely to persist when they possessed a strong sense of belonging Upon examining differences of campus environment perceptions the results showed that gender identity influenced campus environment perceptions and race influenced sense of belonging among students There was insufficient evidence to establish differences of campus environment perceptions and sense of belonging among residential and commuter students Limitations regarding this study included its generalizability due to the low number of survey responses and the physical aspect of campus environment and campus culture Recommendations for policymakers and practitioners include consideration for community memberships increase campus support for underrepresented groups and cultural competency for training Recommendations for future research include the use of different theoretical frameworks to understand student persistence continued studies involving community colleges inclusive campus environment perceptions and sense of belonging studies and qualitative studies on campus environment perceptions and sense of belong of community college students Journal of Eastern Townships Studies ,1995 New York Court of Appeals. Records and Briefs.
