

Ulysses as a dramatic monologue Essay Example

A Dramatic monologue is a lyric poem in which a single imaginary speaker or a historical personage expresses his thoughts and feelings to an imaginary silent audience. The dramatic monologue as we understand it today "is a lyric poem in which the speaker addresses a silent listener, revealing himself in the context of a dramatic situation" (Murfin 97). "The character is speaking to an identifiable but silent listener at a dramatic moment in the speaker's life. Robert Browning is well known for dramatic monologues.

Tennyson another Victorian genius like Robert Browning is good at composing dramatic monologues. "My last Duchess", "Andrea Del Sarto", "Fra lippo lippi", "Ulysses and Tithonus" are some of his best known Dramatic Monologues. His well-known poem 'Ulysses' is an excellent example of dramatic monologue in which he adopts a classic hero Ulysses or Odysseus as the main character. Here he tries to focus on the adventurous as well as knowledge seeking spirit of Ulysses. But the philosophy given through the mouth of Ulysses is actually Tennyson's own philosophy.

The entire poem is spoken by a single character, whose identity is revealed by his own words. The lines are in blank verse, or unrhymed iambic pentameter, which serves to impart a fluid and natural quality to Ulysses' speech. Many of the lines are enjambed, which means that a thought does not end with the line-break; the sentences often end in the middle, rather than the end, of the lines. The use of enjambment is appropriate in a poem about pushing forward "beyond the utmost bound of human thought."

Finally, the poem is divided into four paragraph-like sections, each of which comprises a distinct thematic unit of the poem. In the poem 'Ulysses', Ulysses is supposed to be speaking and expressing his thoughts and feelings to the silent listeners. He is standing before the royal palace of Ithaca and speaks before the mariners, who had been his fellow sojourners during his long journey to Troy. The monologue begins with his cynical remarks towards life. "It little profits that an idle king By this still hearth among these barren crags, That hoard and sleep and feed and know not me".

Ulysses, the man of nimble wit, is not satisfied with his life among his subjects, who are unaware of his heroic mould. His aged wife Penelope also cannot understand his heroic soul. But his intention is not clear until he says. "I cannot rest from travel, I will drink Life to the lees". Here by the word 'travel' he means the journey which he made to rescue Helen from Paris and the perilous journey after the destruction of Troy. But he refuses to take rest and in determination to take a life of adventure to the very end.

He compares life to a cup of wine. Just as a man drinks till he has reached the sediment at the bottom, Ulysses also will taste all aspects of life without leaving anything behind. Through these words, Ulysses
