

CLEAN ENERGY CHOICE AND THIRD-PARTY FINANCING

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Many Wisconsin residents, businesses, governments, and schools are unable to pursue clean energy for their premises due to the high upfront costs associated with the installation of renewable energy projects. As with many home improvements, paying for solar, biogas, and wind projects can be challenging without access to third-party financing.

Decades of Wisconsin case law and statutes allow for third-party financing because the third-party owner is not acting as a "public utility" in any sense. However, over the past several years, some utilities have challenged solar installations with third-party financing structures, and the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin has not expressly acknowledged what the law provides. As a result, Wisconsinites lack broad access to third-party financing to more effectively meet their clean energy goals, create jobs, and help manage energy bills while improving the resiliency of the electricity grid. Legal affirmation of third-party financing is essential for Wisconsin's clean energy future.

WHAT IS THIRD-PARTY FINANCING?

Third-party financing, also called third-party ownership or TPO, allows low to middle-income homeowners, churches, schools, government agencies, nonprofits, and commercial sites to "go solar" with little to no upfront costs. A third party owns and maintains a solar system, and the home or building owner uses the electricity generated onsite. The third party provides access to necessary capital that would not otherwise be available.

This financing tool allows Wisconsinites to exercise their property rights and preferences for renewable energy at no extra cost to ratepayers and taxpayers. Typically, third-party financing takes the form of a power purchase agreement (PPA) or a lease. With a PPA, the customer pays for the electricity that the system generates at an agreed-upon rate. With a lease, the customer pays a fixed fee each month regardless of electricity generation.
