

ABSTRACT:

The Actinide series contains elements with atomic numbers 89 to 103 and is the third group in the periodic table. The series is the row below the Lanthanide series, which is located underneath the main body of the periodic table. Lanthanide and Actinide Series are both referred to as Rare Earth Metals. These elements all have a high diversity in oxidation numbers and all are radioactive. The most common and known element is Uranium, which is used as nuclear fuel when its converted into plutonium, through a nuclear reaction.

►INTRODUCTION:

Studies of the coordination chemistry of the actinides have been limited by a number of factors – the care needed in handling radioactive materials and the possibility of damage to human tissue from the radiation; toxicity (especially Pu); the very small quantities available; and very short half-lives of the later actinides; radiation and heating damage to solutions; and radiation damage (defects and dislocations) to crystals.

The vast majority of the studies reported have concerned the metals thorium and uranium, particularly the latter, due to accessibility of raw materials, ease of handling, and the long lifetimes of the relatively readily α -emitting elements Th and U. In many cases, compounds of neptunium and plutonium with similar formulas to U and Th analogues have been made and found to be isomorphous and thus presumably isostructural.
