Transfer In Language Production:

Transfer in Language Production Hans W. Dechert, Manfred Raupach, 1989 The chapters in this volume represent an approach to the notion of language transfer which reflects the paradigm shift originating from cognitive science The perception and expression of ideas and events in one language in terms of another language is considered only a special case of one of the fundamental processes in human problem solving reasoning by analogy Transfer in language production is seen as a basic metaphorical concept denoting language interaction that must be discussed in connection with other metaphorical concepts denoting language interaction as well If this is true the assessment of language transfer in light of the production paradigm has hardly begun It will continue to be a topic of far reaching consequences for a theory of language processing and language acquisition

Transfer Effects in Multilingual Language Development Hagen Peukert, 2015-04-15 This volume dedicated to language transfer starts out with state of the art psycholinguistic approaches to language transfer involving studies on psycho typological transfer lexical interference and foreign accent The next chapter on Transfer in Language Learning Contact and Change presents new empirical data from several languages English German Russian French Italian on various transfer phenomena ranging from second language acquisition and contact induced change in word order to cross linguistic influences in word formation and the lexicon Transfer in Applied Linguistics scrutinizes on the one hand the external sources of language transfer by investigating bilingual resources and the school context but also by pointing out the differences in academic language in multilingual adolescents On the other hand internal sources of language transfer in multilingual classrooms are illuminated A final chapter directs its focus on methodological issues that arise when more than one language is studied systematically and it offers a solution on causal effects for the investigation of heritage language proficiencies The chapter also includes studies that exploit more innovative methodologies on L1 identification and clitic acquisition

Processability Approaches to Second Language Development and Second Language Learning Jörg-U. Keßler, 2009-03-26 A fundamental issue in second language acquisition research and in applied linguistics is the question of how learners acquire a second language Today it is general knowledge that any second language learning follows certain theoretically established and empirically supported developmental sequences Based on Processability Theory Pienemann 1998 and 2005 one can diagnose current states of individual learners second language development Knowing about the path of second language development provides important insights into what learners are ready to acquire in the second language at a given point in time This can support second language learning both in natural and instructional settings Pienemann s Processability Theory PT provides a well researched and empirically substantiated framework to explain the developmental sequences in second language learning across languages Taking Pienemann 1998 and 2005 as the point of departure the chapters of this book apply test and extend PT The book is organised in four parts I Introduction II Current Theoretical Issues within the PT Framework III Applying PT to the Second Language Classroom and IV Work in Progress

Richards,1983 The Cumulative Book Index ,1990 A world list of books in the English language Annual Review of Applied Linguistics ,2005 Phonological Transfer in Second Language Perception and Production Barbara Jean Hancin-Bhatt,1994 This study provides an account of how a speaker s first language L1 influences his her second language L2 speech an effect also known as cross language transfer The account of transfer proposed here relies on theoretical constructs and techniques from linguistics psycholinguistics and to a limited extent computational modelling The study contributes to an understanding of the perception production relationship in L2 speech how transfer factors into that relationship and general universal principles which constrain transfer To explain interdental substitutions by speakers of English as a second language ESL an analysis based on feature prominence Halle 1959 is adopted Phonological segments are assumed to consist of a set of features a la Chomsky and Halle 1968 each of which has a relative prominence or weight of importance based on a language s segment inventory By underspecifying Archangeli 1984 the segment inventory of a language a feature s prominence relative to other features arises as a result of the minimal phonemic distinctions it makes in the overall inventory Features with higher prominence are considered to be more salient to speakers of that particular language Upon hearing unfamiliar aural input features which are more salient are perceived more easily This in part dictates which sounds will be substituted for interdental The phonemic inventories of four languages are analyzed and the relative prominence of continuant in each is derived Those languages are Hindi Turkish German and Japanese ESL speakers of these languages are then tested on their perception of English interdentals across several contexts Results indicate that the above analysis predicts how three of the four sets of language speakers perceive interdentals The same ESL speakers were tested on production of interdentals across different contexts and the results of the perception and production tasks are compared By looking at four different first languages and the speakers perception and production abilities universal and language specific effects as well as task specific effects are observed A computational model based on connectionist processing was designed to simulate the hypotheses and results from the experiments A connectionist model was used because of its compatibility with functional approaches to second language acquisition Gasser 1991 MacWhinney 1989 Though the results of the modelling were not ideal they suggest that the modelling is a plausible and useful method for understanding sound substitutions
