

Topic 1: ISSUES IN EAST AFRICAN HISTORY

History is a discipline that deals with a study of transformations that have occurred in human societies over a period of time. History is about change and change in defined human societies. These societies are defined by culture, religion, economic and political systems and also by geographical localities; African History began asserting itself as an independent genre of knowledge in the sixty years or so. Prior to 1950, African history was discussed as a sub theme of European activities in Africa. The history of East African History is a category of historical knowledge that focuses in the study of change and transformation in societies that have resided in the East African region. East Africa comprises of Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania; Thus, the history of East Africa addresses itself to social, economic and political changes in the three east African countries. The history of East Africa is broad. In terms of periodization, it covers the period from 1.AD to 2009.AD. At the level of content this history comprises of migration and settlement patterns of communities that occupy East African Countries. It also covers systems of production e.g. hunting and gathering, pastoralism, peasant farming, trade and industry. Similarly, the content also consists of political systems of governance that include: as cephalous (decentralized) and centralized systems of administration. It also focuses on European colonial political economy, struggle for independence, the independent state, post-colonial economy, governance in independent east Africa and the impact of global politics and economy on East African economies and states. East African history too focuses on the theory and method used in the study and writing of socio-economic and political developments among communities in East African countries. In terms of theory, one has in mind liberal, Marxist/neo-Marxist and post-modernist theories. In talking of method, one has to think of oral traditions, archaeology, social anthropology, linguistics and other multi-disciplinary approaches.

- As cephalous: A system of administration that is based on council of elders
- Centralized System of administration: a system of administration where the head of state is the head of government and he/she is referred to as a chief/king.
- Liberal theory: This is a method of explaining and presenting knowledge by emphasizing issues of democracy, human rights and free market economy
- Marxist theory.: This refers to a system of knowledge which began with Karl Marx who argued that class consciousness, class struggle and modes of production. He developed the concept of political economy to explain socio-economic and political transformations in human societies. In his analysis he brought out the argument that materialism is at the centre of development. Neo Marxists modified Marxist theories and adapted them to suit specific states in Africa, Asia and Latin America.
- Post modernism: This refers to approaches that have been developed in the post-cold war period to study transformation in human societies. Post modernism is a cross breed of liberal and Marxist/neo-Marxist theories. These are theories that emphasize liberal democracy, liberalization of the economy, human rights, gender, Information and Communication technology and global political economy in the study of developments in human societies.
