Data derived from the administration of the Canadian Chiropractic Examining Board (CCEB) examinations for a nine year period, 1987–1995, were used to evaluate the reliability and validity of the subject tests: anatomy, chemistry, chiropractic practice, diagnosis and symptomatology, microbiology and public health, neurology, pathology, physiology, and x-ray interpretation and physics. Nearly two-thousand candidates from more than eighteen chiropractic colleges have written the CCEB exams over this nine year period. The results indicate that the exams have adequate alpha reliabilities (.69 to .80) and theoretically appropriate statistical properties and item characteristics. There is also substantial evidence of content validity. Results from stepwise multiple regression and factor analyses provided evidence for the criterion-related and construct validity of the exams. The implication of these results for the continued refinement and development of the CCEB exams, together with suggestions for on-going research of their reliability and validity, are discussed.

KEY WORDS: Board examinations, psychometric analyses, reliability and validity, chiropractic.

Données tirées de la commission d'annotation du Canadian Chiropractic Examining Board (CCEB) sur une période de neuf ans (1987 à 1995). Ces données ont servi à évaluer la fiabilité et la validité des examens des sujets : anatomie, chimie, pratique chiropratique, diagnostic et symptomatologie, microbiologie et santé publique, neurologie, pathologie, physiologie, interprétation des radiographies et physique. Environ deux mille personnes de plus de dix-huit collèges de chiropractie ont pris part aux examens du CCEB pendant cette période de neuf ans. Les résultats indiquent que les examens présentent des fiabilités alpha adéquates (de 0,69 à 0,80) et des propriétés statistiques et des caractéristiques d'articles appropriées théoriquement. On trouve également des preuves significatives de la validité du contenu. Les résultats de l'analyse de régression multiple séquentielle et de l'analyse factorielle ont apporté des indications de la validité du test critériel et de la validité conceptuelle des examens. Il s'ensuit une discussion des répercussions de ces résultats afin d'assurer un raffinement et une élaboration soutenus des examens du CCEB, de même que des suggestions pour une recherche continue de leur fiabilité et de leur validité.

Introduction

The Canadian Chiropractic Examining Board (CCEB) conducts what are called "high stakes" exams. These are exams whose results are the basis of very important decisions about the candidates who take them. Examinations in law, medicine, and psychology, for example, which candidates must pass in order to receive a license to practice in
