

Mr. Galbraith contends that this photograph shows the "men of care" and that they are considerably less to his forty-nine years than to the fifteen months when he excluded himself, mostly in Switzerland, to work on The Affluent Society.

Born in Canada, Mr. Galbraith was educated at the University of California, he has taught at Princeton and at Harvard, where he is Professor of Economics. During World War II he was in charge of price control for OPA and he was for several years an editor of Fortune.

Mr. Galbraith's two most widely read books are American Capitalism and The Great Crash, 1929 which has become the classic account of that disaster.

Like the late J. M. Keynes, Mr. Galbraith is firmly persuaded that yesterday's truth is today's stereotype. We protect ourselves only by keeping economic society under constant re-examination. The Affluent Society is such a re-examination. Mark Van Doren, commenting on the author's style and "magic way with words," once called him a poet. The American Economic Review has said that he succeeds in being "at once polemical and good humored." The present volume provided him with ample scope for these talents.
