Yellow Feather:

The Osprey, 1898      Technique of Some South American Feather-work Charles Williams Mead, 1907 But little attempt has been made to identify the particular kinds of feathers used in making the above described ornaments It may be said in a general way that the ancient Peruvians employed the feathers of the macaw and of many other varieties of the parrot family and occasionally in plumes of the larger head dresses those of the king vulture The Karaja Indians of Brazil use the plumage of the macaw in the greater part of their feather work although that of other birds not identified will be found In the work of the Chamacoccos and Guato of Paraguay feathers of the American ostrich Rhea and of different varieties of the parrot family are most commonly used In describing step by step the process of making the various feather attachments I have followed the order which seemed most natural but the same result could of course have often been reached by proceeding in a different order In comparing the different forms of attachments shown in the illustrations one striking difference will be seen between the methods of the ancient Peruvians and the work of such modern Indians as has been figured The former employ a true knot in every instance except in such cases as have the two parts wound together with thread In the modern work a loop or turn about the shaft takes the place of the knot Figs 1 a and 8 illustrate the difference between these two methods If a cord attached to a shaft as in Fig 1 a be slipped downward until free from the feather and then the ends drawn a knot will result but if we draw the ends of the cord in the form shown in Fig 8 the loop disappears and there is no knot A few words may be said regarding artificially colored feathers in the work of the South American Indians I have never been able to detect a single instance of their use among the ancient Peruvians and the custom would seem to be confined at the present day to a few localities Two ornaments have been described consisting of feathers stained red and purple by aniline dyes These were used by the Aymar Indians in the vicinity of La Paz Bolivia who have lived many years in close contact with the white man and have become well acquainted with his cheap dyes The use of these dyed feathers which have a particularly garish and unnatural appearance is I believe one evidence of the decadence which seems inevitable to Indians in their situation Primitive man even in his combinations of most brilliantly colored feathers seldom produces effects that offend the artistic eye P 17      Catalogue of the Birds in the British Museum, 1890      Catalogue of the Birds in the British Museum: Passeriformes, or perching birds. Department of Zoology, 1890 This enormous undertaking which according to one of the prefaces professes to be a complete list of every bird known at the time of publication kept growing even as it was being written The Museum added eagerly to their already vast collections during the decades of publication acquiring by gift the great collections of A O Hume on Asian birds and those of Sclater and Salvin and Godwin on Neotropical birds so that the size of the collection nearly tripled between 1874 and 1888 Sharpe originally intended to do all the work himself but others were called in when this became clearly impossible The plates are all of birds not previously illustrated In the decades following its publication this catalogue was universally acclaimed as the most important work on systematic ornithology that has ever been published Zimmer p 96 And even after one hundred years it remains an essential reference for the serious ornithologist as it underpins a great deal of modern bird classification With 387 plates most hand coloured lithographs some chromolithographs by William Hart J G Keulemans Joseph and Peter Smit
