Characteristics and Analysis of Non-Flammable Polymers T.R Crompton,2013-03-04 In recent years there has been an increasing demand for fire retardant versions of a range of plastics Such applications are fire retardancy in vehicles aircraft manned space vehicles marine and industrial applications such as electronics and a wide range of applications in the building industry including roofing and interior walls Also in domestic applications such as furniture clothes bedding upholstery and electrical goods Fire retardancy in polymers can be achieved by either of three ways Firstly there are forms of polymers such as polytetrafluoroethylene which are intrinsically fire retardant The second type are rendered fire retardant by the inclusion of a suitable additive in the formulation These include additives based on bromine antimony nitrogen phosphorus and silicon An essential requirement for fire retardant polymers used in enclosed spaces is that they do not release any toxic products upon combustion In this respect antimony containing additives are going out of favour due to the release of toxic antimony volatiles upon combustion Thirdly introduction of intumescence into polymers by the introduction of suitable compounds is being increasingly used as a means of imparting fire retardancy in polymers There exists a plethora of methods used to assess fire retardancy in polymers These are discussed and summarised in this book The book will be of interest not only to working in industry but also to design engineers and producers in the polymer fabrication industries
