Why Global Capability Centers Fail Ramaswamy Narayanan, 2025-10-18 Why Global Capability Centers Fail and How to Reimagine Them for 2030 Global Capability Centers were once celebrated as cost saving back offices Today they sit at the crossroads of enterprise transformation yet too many fail to live up to their promise They struggle with limited trust outdated operating models and the misconception that efficiency alone equals success The result Centers that deliver activity but not influence output but not impact Why Global Capability Centers Fail is a candid practitioner led examination of one of the most critical yet misunderstood elements of modern enterprise strategy Over the past two decades Global Capability Centers GCCs have grown from tactical cost saving units to strategic enablers of business transformation Yet despite their promise many still fall short of their potential underleveraged misunderstood or reduced to transactional delivery arms This book is written to uncover why Through powerful frameworks case snapshots and future ready scorecards this book equips enterprise sponsors GCC leaders and transformation architects with a roadmap to move from fragile centers to capability platforms that co create value across the global system of centers The message is clear by 2030 enterprises will not compete on cost alone They will compete on capability And only those GCCs that transform now will shape the future Into the

Mattingly, 2014-01-02 A compilation of the proceedings of a conference held to honor Alvin M Liberman for his outstanding contributions to research in speech perception this volume deals with two closely related and controversial proposals for which Liberman and his colleagues at Haskins Laboratories have argued forcefully over the past 35 years The first is that articulatory gestures are the units not only of speech production but also of speech perception the second is that speech production and perception are not cognitive processes but rather functions of a special mechanism This book explores the implications of these proposals not only for speech production and speech perception but for the neurophysiology of language language acquisition higher level linguistic processing the visual perception of phonetic gestures the production and perception of sign language the reading process and learning to read The contributors to this volume include linguists psycholinguists speech scientists neurophysiologists and ethologists Liberman himself responds in the final chapter

Vowel Inherent Spectral Change Geoffrey Stewart Morrison, Peter F. Assmann, 2012-12-14 It has been traditional in phonetic research to characterize monophthongs using a set of static formant frequencies i e formant frequencies taken from a single time point in the vowel or averaged over the time course of the vowel However over the last twenty years a growing body of research has demonstrated that at least for a number of dialects of North American English vowels which are traditionally described as monophthongs often have substantial spectral change Vowel inherent spectral change has been observed in speakers productions and has also been found to have a substantial effect on listeners perception In terms of acoustics the traditional categorical distinction between monophthongs and diphthongs can be replaced by a gradient description of dynamic spectral patterns This book includes chapters addressing various aspects of vowel inherent spectral change VISC including theoretical and experimental studies of the perceptually relevant aspects of VISC the relationship between articulation vocal tract trajectories and VISC historical changes related VISC cross dialect cross language and cross age group comparisons of VISC the effects of VISC on second language speech learning and the use of VISC in forensic voice comparison
