Explaining Russian-German code-mixing Nikolay Hakimov, 2021-10-26 The study of grammatical variation in language mixing has been at the core of research into bilingual language practices Although various motivations have been proposed in the literature to account for possible mixing patterns some of them are either controversial or remain untested Little is still known about whether and how frequency of use of linguistic elements can contribute to the patterning of bilingual talk This book is the first to systematically explore the factor usage frequency in a corpus of bilingual speech The two aims are i to describe and analyze the variation in mixing patterns in the speech of Russia German adolescents and young adults in Germany and ii to propose and test usage based explanations of variation in mixing patterns in three morphosyntactic contexts the adjective modified noun phrase the prepositional phrase and the plural marking of German noun insertions in bilingual sentences In these contexts German noun insertions combine with either Russian or German words and grammatical markers thus yielding mixed bilingual and German monolingual constituents in otherwise Russian sentences the latter also labelled as embedded language islands The results suggest that the frequency with which words are used together mediates the distribution of mixing patterns in each of the examined contexts The differing impacts of co occurrence frequency are attributed to the distributional and semantic specifics of the analyzed morphosyntactic configurations Lexical frequency has been found to be another important determinant in this variation Other factors include recency or lexical priming in discourse in the case of prepositional phrases and phonological and structural similarities and differences in the inflectional systems of the contact languages in the case of plural marking The Spirit of Russia Tomáš Garrigue Masaryk, 1919 New Mecca, New Babylon Robert H. Johnston, 1988-07-01 Three major waves of emigration from Soviet Russia followed the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 and the Russian Civil War While emigrants in the first wave have been identified mainly with a vague notion of aristocratic taxi drivers Robert Johnston through a collective biography of the roughly 120 000 Russians who lived in France during 1920 45 in particular in Paris shows that this first wave of Russian emigrants made a much more significant contribution to French life and to western knowledge of Russia Paris was the capital of Russia Abroad the home of an emigre generation which included figures from every field of Russian culture and every point of the political compass Divided and diverse the community was bound together in the hope and expectation of the downfall of Bolshevism and a return to Mother Russia Members of the community believed that their mission in Paris was to preserve Russian culture language and liberty a task which required educating France and the West about the true dangers of Communism As their time away from Russia increased however the exiles found it difficult to preserve their organizations and customs and to resist the assimilation of French ways Gradually the original refugees died moved away or surrendered to French culture by 1951 only 35 000 Russian refugees remained in all of France The Russian exiles in Paris lived on the margins of history But though politically defeated their struggle to defend what they saw as worthwhile Russian values their efforts to survive and their contributions to the life of their country of refuge have something to say to a later age not least to their exiled grandchildren the current third wave of emigrants from the USSR
