House Thinking Winifred Gallagher, 2006-02-07 IKEA Ethan Allen and HGTV may have plenty to say about making a home look right but what makes a home feel right Is it the objects you've collected from your travels or that armchair by the window that reminds you of your grandmother Is it the friendly feeling of a classic American farmhouse or the prestige of a formal Tudor mansion These kinds of questions which have more to do with environmental psychology than mere decorating can give us a new way to think about the diverse spaces Americans call home In House Thinking noted journalist and cultural critic Winifred Gallagher takes the reader on a psychological tour of the American home In each room Gallagher explores many of our deep but often unarticulated intuitions about the power of place Drawing on the latest research in behavioral science an overview of cultural history and interviews with leading architects and designers she shows us how our homes not only reflect who we are but also influence our thoughts feelings and actions Using a variety of examples from famous historical homes to experimental rustic pods Gallagher examines why traditional dining rooms and living rooms have given way to great rooms how the oversized suburban garage threatens civility how kids rooms can affect their development and why Americans increasingly think of their homes as sanctuaries and refuges House Thinking's unique perspective raises provocative questions How does your entryway prime you for experiencing your home Do you really need a mega kitchen or just a microwave What makes a bedroom a sensual oasis How can your bathroom exacerbate your worst fears It's simply not enough to think of our domestic spaces as design statements or as dumping grounds for our stuff We need to approach our homes in a new way as environments that actively affect us and our quality of life Stressing the home's substance over its style House Thinking is a surprising look at how we live and how we could
